THE DEVIL MIGHT WEAR PRADA, BUT GOOD GIRLS WEAR DENISE...

Anyone who thinks fashion designers are self-absorbed narcissists has never met Denise Hajjar, the local-girl-done-good whose designs adorn celebrities and socialites and whose boutique inside the Fairmont Copley Plaza is proof that Boston is, in fact, a stylish town.

To debut her 2007 spring/summer collection, Hajjar hosted a fashion show to raise money for the New England Home for Little Wanderers. The evening began with a cocktail reception and silent auction, and continued with a runway presentation that drew nonstop applause from an appreciative crowd.

There to cheer her on were such friends and fans as the très chic Jessica Naddaff, foxy blonde fabulon Barbara Brilliant, Back Bay grande dame Rosalie Cohen, publishing poobah David Jacobs and his blushing bride, Gen Treacy, lensman to the stars Joe Greene, Milton's answer to Doris Day, Peggy Dray, nonprofit cutie Beverly Jarozs, Harbor mistress Vivien Li, and the evening's wickedly entertaining emcee, Susan Wornick, who responded to the compliment, "You look wonderful!" by saying, "Thanks. I'm wearing my good bra."

Among the other bons mots overheard throughout the evening:

One woman who said, "In the '70s, I was thin and my hair was fat. Now, it's the other way around," and another who complained about her retired husband being around the house all the time, saying, "I told him, 'I married you for better or worse, not for lunch.'"

GUESS WHO'S COMING TO DINNER?

Most of the time, Community Servings serves hot meals to homebound AIDS and cancer patients, but for one night a year, they also serve a horde of hungry socialites, who gather at the Langham Hotel for a cocktail reception of mammoth proportions, followed by intimate dinner parties at restaurants all over town.

Spotted among the bunch at this year's Life Savor were such stalwarts as the organization's fairy godmother, Joan Parker, and her mystery-novelist other half, Bob (who parked himself at a table and endured the endless gushing of fans), board member and tie designer Tony Corey with the dashing C.J. Menard, Channel 7 glamazon Frances Rivera, music industry titan Oedipus, tall drink of water Ty Dowell, liquor industry bigwig Peter Stone, the ubiquitous Hat Sisters, up-and-coming fashion designer Michael DePaulo and his muse for the evening, Kerrin Griffin, exuberant foodie Deborah Hughes, feather-festooned local legend Doris Yaffe, the dashing Steven Sweeney, white-hot interior designers Eric Roseff and Dennis Duffy, the high-octane hat trick of Nancy Friedman, Francoise Thiese and Bonnie Berger, peerless hotelier Serge Denis (who graciously hosts the cocktail party every year), bespectacled hipster John Karaian, transplanted Texan Turner Hicks, City Hall fashion plate Tony Nunziante, blue-blooded restaurateur George Lewis, food scribe Corby Kummer, fringe theater impresario Abe Rybeck, and so on and so forth.

Following copious cocktails and finger food, the revelers left for their respective destinations, but not before the following comments were overheard:

"This is like a parade of scary exboyfriends."

"Oh, look, there's Shawn, right behind the chicken on a stick… which is sort of the same thing."

And one straight man wearing purple eyeglasses, who said, "Do these make me look gay?" to which a friend responded: "No. Sleeping with men makes you look gay. Those glasses make you look like a geek."

IT WAS LIKE LA BOHÈME, MINUS THE TUBERCULOSIS...

A welcome reprieve from all those same-old, same-old black-tie hoo-has, the Artist's Ball encourages guests to don their most creative and outrageous outfits, and while for many Bostonians, that still means something borderline funereal, enough guests arrived at the Cyclorama wearing something bohemian or kooky to make it a party worthy of its name.

A fundraiser for the Boston Center for the Arts, the evening began with cocktails and little nibbles and continued with dinner and dancing. The assorted entertainment interspersed throughout included an arts-and-crafts corner where guests could make their own masks, decorating them with everything from colorful feathers and popcorn to glitter and fuzzy little balls (insert joke here).

Present and accounted for: Harvard big wig Philip Lovejoy and his husband, travel titan Jim Moses, sybaritic socialite Janet "Princess Zhanay" Goff, the delightful and delicious Trearty Bartley, super-suave smoothie Giuseppe Frustaci, New York import Andrew Crain squiring the soignée Roberta Destefano, Boston Ballet stars Gino DiMarco and his swanlike wife, Adriana Suarez, theatrical genius Ryan Landry and his sidekick, Penny Champagne, the incomparable Karen Holmes-Ward with the ever-affable Chip, celebrity chef Gordon Hamersley, banking behemoth Larry Fish, weather oracle Dick Albert, the devilishly handsome Dean Hara, gorgeous young things Jennifer Epstein and Bill Keravuori, the man known simply as HTM of NYC and the lovely Leslie Mays, the divine Becca D'Bus, best-selling novelist Bill Martin and his delightful wife, Christine, fashion icon Leah Ikeda, incorrigible scamp Tim Grafft and his other half, world-renowned architect David Hacin, senatorial sister Thalia Tsongas Schlessinger, arts booster Libby Shufro, and the city's most beloved perpetrator of public art, Sidewalk Sam, which should give you some idea of what an eclectic and interesting group was in attendance.

Referring to her mask, one guest said, "It tickles a little and makes me sweat," but that statement could just as easily have applied to the party itself.

As one guest put it, "This is one of the few fundraisers in Boston where you don't feel like everyone's clenching their butt cheeks." iB

GIRL AND BOY MEET

Spring and summer are the best seasons for dating, more than one single friend has told me. If that's so, then our annual dating issue hits the streets at just the right time.

To get a date, you've first got to catch the eye of someone appealing, so this year we've focused our feature stories on one important theme: how to be a chick/dude magnet (as we've so maturely phrased it). Toward that end, we sent two staffers out on the town to test different outfits, compiled tips for smoothly handling a first at-home date, tested perfumes and colognes for appeal to the opposite sex, and gathered some hair-raising dating dealbreaker stories that offer lessons on what not to do when you're looking for love. Now go out there and work your magic, boys and girls.

LOST VALUABLE

Last year, your Most Valuable Bartenders list included Jefferson Ryder. This year, his name was unceremoniously omitted from that list (May 2). Although Jefferson is no longer working at Vox Populi, he's still bartending in Boston, at the Charlesmark Lounge on Boylston Street in the Back Bay. He continues to be one of the best bartenders that this city, or any city, has ever seen, and he is, as your Most Valuable Bartender heading states, "recommended without reservation."

MISSED CONNECTION

I follow the fashion in the IMPROPER. I always like the photos. They're tasteful and upscale, but at the same time down-to-earth. The bridal issue (April 18) wasn't an exception. I really liked the photos, but was surprised with the choice of the cover image. I wasn't able to associate the photo of the beautiful young woman with the bridal topic. Don't get me wrong—it was a lovely photo, but irrelevant to the issue.

BEAN THERE, DONE THAT

Ezra's column about his experience as "the Bean" (April 18) was fantastic—not only because it was funny, but because it was the truth. I think something strange comes over people when they put that Bean suit on. I was on Newbury Street a couple weeks ago, and the Bean was out in full force. As my friend and I approached it, it waved to us, and we waved back and smiled. But that wasn't enough for the Bean. It wanted us to stop and pay attention to it, and even tried to slow us down with that clumsy Bean hand. It seemed annoyed when we didn't stop to pet it, or whatever it is it wanted us to do.

NEW IN TOWN

Mediterranean State of Mind

Aldo Velaj mans a patio table on Boylston Street, going over plans for his new restaurant, Vlora, with two contractors. One, a burly guy, cracks a joke. "Greek!" Velaj exclaims, pointing at him by way of explanation. With Vlora (named for Velaj's Albanian birthplace), it's all in the Mediterranean family. That means no suits swooping in to offer Back Bayers yet another fine-dining destination. Velaj has teamed with his wife, Cindy Tsai, to open a down-home spot this month, pouring in their life savings. "The food is going to be approached in a minimalist way," he says, "what Mediterranean people eat every day."

Think olive oil. "Lots of olive oil," Velaj stresses. And straightforward preparations that showcase fresh, seasonal produce. Vlora's grilled octopus appetizer ($11.95), for one, has "no weird flavors [like] cilantro," he says. Just olive oil, vinegar, salt and pepper. The watermelon-feta starter ($6.95) is as simple as—watermelon and feta. "We wanted to offer something that was a notch down from Sorellina," Tsai explains. The easy menu, which covers Albanian, Greek and southern Italian cuisine, includes basic side dishes like lemon potatoes ($5.75), intended for sharing. Entrées like barbounia ($18.95), a fish indigenous to the Mediterranean, and grilled ostrich steak (market price) get grouped as "from the sea" or "from the land."

Velaj himself may be from the coast, but he spent the past four years studying the Boston dining scene, putting in time at Brasserie Jo. "The way restaurants work back there is very different," he observes of Europe. "Everything is slower." He should know, having taken his first gig at age 16. He went on to play chef throughout the Mediterranean and owned Taverna Acropolis in Tirana before moving to the States in 2003. He met Tsai at a dinner party, and she's integral to his new venture. Trained as an attorney, she handles the business operations at Vlora, freeing Velaj to focus on the food and to work the room.

About that room. Vlora's décor continues the Mediterranean motif. Under construction, the 171-seat space in Friends Japanese Restaurant's former location will feature a water wall, citrus trees and landscape scenes. A small patio—albeit on Boylston, not the Riviera—offers another European touch. Also setting the mood is the signature drink, Mediterranean Sunset ($8), a souped-up sangria. Vlora has a beer-and-wine license, but no hard booze. The good news is the reasonable costs ($6-$12 by the glass). "Wine is wine," Velaj says. "Wine should be there every day." It's that kind of statement that makes Vlora sound like a welcome state of mind. Vlora, 545 Boylston St., Boston (617-638-9699). —Megan Lisagor

INNER VIEW

Ah, Paris

Gus Van Sant isn't just any director. And he has an Oscar for Good Will Hunting to prove it. Plus, kudos at Cannes, the Independent Spirit Awards, the Berlin International Film Festival and pretty much every other big movie event on the planet. Now he's one of 22 directors chosen to collaborate on Paris, Je T'aime, a collection of vignettes on the City of Lights, which opens at the Kendall Theatre May 25.

THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: How did you get involved with Paris, Je T'aime?

Gus Van Sant: The offer actually came to me in an e-mail. It was a group project and had been in existence for a while before I got involved.

IB: Is there one aspect or scene that you particularly like?

GVS: Yes, the ending. It's charming.

IB: Have you spent a lot of time in Paris?

GVS: Yes, in the past few years—also because of the film.

IB: Bostonians are still talking about Good Will Hunting.

GVS: The film was a bit of a success story, because two unknown actors wrote it. I read about it in some of the trade papers when it was first sold, and then it was sent to me about two years later. I actually got Ben's number from his brother Casey, and called him up to tell him how good it was. It then went through a series of directors who were more reluctant to do it, because Ben and Matt were unknown, but I was into that.

IB: What's next? Any other films with Flea from the Chili Peppers?

GVS: He's a good actor, as seen from his music career. And now he's a good friend. He was in Psycho and My Own Private Idaho, and almost played Rick in Drugstore Cowboy.

IB: How do you pick projects?

GVS: It's pretty spontaneous. It's whatever really seems exciting at the time. It could be an idea, a story, a setting..

IB: You must get a lot of screenplays.

GVS: Sometimes people will hand them to me in the street or something, but actually, my agents are told to not send me unsolicited scripts for libel reasons.

IB: So, if I send you my own script, you can't read it? Damn. It's pretty good.

GVS: I probably disappoint a lot of people whose scripts I never see. —Leslie P. Kilgore ection has its price.

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

Tales From Suburbia… This just in from suburban foodieland: In the Italian category, Christopher Robbins and Jonathan Schwarz opened a third Stone Hearth Pizza in Needham April 24. Like its tasty siblings in Belmont and Sudbury, the upscale eatery offers Neapolitan-style pizzas, an impressive selection of regional beer and wine, and a gelato counter. On the French front, Sel de la Terre will open its second location this September, between Neiman Marcus and Nordstrom, at the new Natick Collection shopping plaza. Chef Daniel Bojorquez will recreate the same Provençal menu that's helped SDLT flourish in its State Street spot, and the Natick space will also feature a signature boulangerie, serving up fresh coffee and baked goods daily. *Stone Hearth, 974 Great Plain Ave., Needham (781-433-0600). www.stonehearthpizza.com. If the Shoe Fits... When it comes to Italian design house Salvatore Ferragamo, classic is an understatement. Around for 80 years, Ferragamo makes shoes, clothes and accessories that never go out of style. So it's fitting that the company is finally opening a boutique in Boston—the capital of classic styling. Slated to open June 4, the 3,200-square-foot space in the Copley Place mall will house all the women's and men's shoes, leather and silk accessories, ready-to-wear clothes and signature fragrances you, your parents and grandparents could want. Copley Place, 100 Huntington Ave, Boston. www.ferragamo.com.

Band of Brothers... Jim and Andrew Statires know a thing or two about the bar and restaurant business. Originally from Manchester, N.H., they've been involved with family-owned eateries for as long as they can remember. After a stint in San Diego, Calif., they have come back to their roots with a new venture. J.A. Stats is the latest lunch and after-work bar to hit the Financial District. Formerly Tyrnan's Pub, it's now an "upscale neighborhood bar," according to Andrew, with new hardwood floors, a mahogany bar, flat-screen TVs and a full menu of American pub food. 99 Broad St., Boston.

Where to Go, What to Do... The travel sections of Boston bookstores are packed with guides to our fair city, covering every topic a tourist (or resident) might care to explore. The cute new eat.shop.boston guide, however, zeroes in on only two crucial topics: locally owned stores and restaurants. Part of the Eat.shop guidebook family, the 6"x6" book highlights some of the city's gems, and a few that are under the radar: eateries like Lulu's Bake Shop, Rachel's Kitchen and Volle Nolle, and shops Easter Wings, Reside and Twentieth Century Limited, to name a few. www.eatshopguides.com. —LPK

ONE-ROUTE WONDER

An impromptu bachelor party demands a trip to Boston's little Vegas: Route 1.

Bachelor parties are fun. Booze, games, steak, naked ladies—what's not to like? Unfortunately, after attending about 15 weddings last year, my schedule this summer is somehow bachelor party–free. That's why, one recent Friday, my friend Ronnie and I decide to throw an impromptu bachelor party for nobody in particular. You know the expression, "It's five o'clock somewhere?" Well, there's a guy about to get married somewhere, too, and we need an excuse to go to the Squire.

Our general destination is that stronghold of North Shore tastefulness, Route 1. If you can't make it to Vegas, Route 1 has you covered with fake cows, a fake dinosaur, a fake Leaning Tower of Pisa (atop a pizza place, of course) and a giant Chinese restaurant. If you stare at the gaudy electronic Kappy's Liquor sign hard enough, you can almost imagine it's a marquee for a Barry Manilow concert.

Our first stop is for dinner at—where else?—the Hilltop Steak House. Absent the civilizing influence of a woman, I will absolutely dine at a place that has plastic cows outside. We sidle up to the bar, because that's always the best option when two dudes are eating together. If I wanted to look at someone and have a conversation and not watch TV, I'd hang out with my wife.

As we watch the game and devour prime rib, the bartender dispenses wisdom. He says, "If you put a bean in a jar for each time you have sex before you're married, then take a bean out for each time you have sex after you're married, you'll never see the bottom of that jar if you live to be 200 years old!" I don't really understand his point, but I guess he means there's a lot of premarital sex going on in the Saugus area.

Stuffed with steak, we run the Route 1 merge gauntlet and pull over about a minute later, at the batting cages. It wouldn't be a proper Route 1 bachelor party without a test of athletic feats, and I've got a date with the "X-Tra Fast" cage. Scarily, there are no batting helmets here—it's just you, a 90-mph fastball and a bat that feels like it's made of solid pig iron. I don't trust the machine not to plunk me, and if I were standing any farther from the plate I'd be at the Kowloon. I strike out every time. I'm like Wily Mo Pena without the scary tattoos and occasional home run. I'm not sure what makes me feel like a bigger loser, my lack of batting-cage acumen or the fact that Ronnie and I are the only people here over the age of 11.

Onward, then, to a place where we're sure to feel like winners: the Squire. Our last stop on the Route One Trail of Fun™, the Squire is a mystery to me. I've been there once before, for an actual bachelor party, but we never got inside because the bachelor in question was deemed too intoxicated for admittance. Being too drunk to get into the Squire is like being too rich to get into a country club—a truly bizarro turn of events. But I figure that if you've got a year to get someone a wedding gift, you probably also have a year to return to the strip club where a bachelor party got turned away at the door. It's just good etiquette.

The Squire has all the usual strip-club fixins': a row of seats about three inches from the stages, a pair of 89-year-old female bartenders, a roster of performers with names like Trixie and Magenta, and a DJ who says things like, "Let's see some greenery for the scenery!" Strangely, it also has an espresso bar just inside the door, which probably makes the Squire the only coffee shop in the Boston area where you need to pass through a metal detector to order a cappuccino.

I don't last long in here. The problem with Route 1 is that it's Route 1, and then you need to drive there. Since I drew the short straw, I'm sipping a Saratoga water at the bar, and I'm having a harder time not drinking than Christopher at the Bada Bing. I couldn't be more uncomfortable if my barstool were upholstered in broken glass.

Next time we have a fake Route 1 bachelor party, someone else is driving. And next time, we're gonna mix it up a little bit. Does anybody know if the Leaning Tower of Pizza has a bar? IB

WHEN NEWS INVADES SPORTS

Sports are supposed to be a diversion, but sometimes reality butts in.

When I began my media career, I had every intention of becoming a sportscaster. One thing I was good at was watching ESPN highlights and reading the sports pages. But while flirting with my dream job, I played with the possibility of doing "hard news." In fact, I started out as a news reporter at KALB-TV (Alexandria, La.) before switching over to the sports side.

Sports is fun. News—especially the hard, painful stuff that dominates the headlines—is too sad for me. I like the fact that people sometimes turn to me and my sports brethren for a respite from topics like the war, drugs and violent crime.

The last week of April provided just such a distraction. In the sports world, it was Sockgate: Curt Schilling's bloody sock was called into question after an off-the-cuff comment by Orioles play-by-play broadcaster Gary Thorne. Thorne said Doug Mirabelli told him that the red stuff on the sock back in the 2004 playoffs was either dressing for a hamburger or an especially vile shade of Benjamin Moore—in any case, not blood.

From Schilling's response on his blog to Mirabelli's backpedaling (he initially called Thorne a liar), the media got the blame. Schilling even suggested putting us reporter types on an island. Hey, Schill, if it's in the Caribbean, I'm all for it. It was pure silliness.

The next day, my sportscasts, naturally, consisted of more Schilling. But then I had to read a story concerning Boston College baseball. BC was playing Virginia Tech. Talk about a sobering story. This was real. This was a college and a team still trying to get over an unexplainable tragedy, one of the worst a school has ever seen, with 32 students and teachers murdered for no reason by a madman, who happened to be a fellow student.

The other hook to the Virginia Tech baseball team was the fact that the coach, Peter Hughes, left BC a year ago for the Hokies program. Peter Hughes' name might not be familiar to you, since college baseball isn't a high-profile sport in these parts, but I've known Hughes for about a decade. He grew up in Brockton and played at Boston College High School. He was terrific at both baseball and football, just a solid guy all around.

On this day, Hughes sat at a microphone at Chestnut Hill. He was on the verge of tears. He didn't know what to say except he didn't think he was qualified to talk about the tragedy. He said he was "embarrassed."

He was wrong, of course. He was more than qualified. Those 35 or so student-athletes were now even more dependent on their coach, and no longer just for playing time or help signing with a pro team.

Hughes calmly stepped up to the plate and did himself and his school proud. He said he refused to have this tragedy become the identity of the kids who put on the Hokies uniform. The team, under his guidance, has been at the forefront of the community's healing process. It was Hughes' squad who staged the first public event on campus following the massacre, when it played Miami.

HARD, PAINFUL STUFF DOMINATES THE HEADLINES. I LIKE THE FACT THAT PEOPLE SOMETIMES TURN TO ME AND MY SPORTS BRETHREN FOR A RESPITE

"I don't think we should have played the game," he said. "But I know we needed to." Even in the short period of time that had gone by, Hughes has noticed his players starting to get mad at themselves, like in the old days, for baseball mistakes. It's a sign, he said, that life is trying to move forward.

"I know these kids are carrying a lot of baggage. It's important for us to get them out there to play college baseball again, especially our seniors," he said. "I want them to care about winning and losing. I want them to go on a little run. I want them to feel great about being a student athlete at Virginia Tech and not be defined by this one event. These guys deserve more than that."

This wasn't what Hughes signed up for when he took the job in Blacksburg, Va., but it looks like the Hokies found the right man for the job. IB

Money Talks

A seasoned investor shares his wisdom.

We all need heroes and heroines, larger-than-life people to learn from. I don't have many heroes in the money game. But with tax time just over, I thought we should hear from a money expert with wisdom, experience and common sense. Ernie Monrad looks somewhat like a former college football player, though he wasn't. Tall and upright, he has a sly smile that seems to imply he knows the world and is amused by its pretensions.

Monrad is the former chairman, now trustee, of Northeast Investors Trust, a mutual fund specializing in high-yield bonds with assets of approximately $1.47 billion. He was born in Little Falls, NY, and his dad ran the Junket Company, manufacturer of wonderful puddings. "Jello was the archenemy," he tells me. "Junket was for people who couldn't tolerate milk. I think my parents thought I couldn't tolerate Little Falls, so they shipped me off to boarding school at age 12."

He eventually went to Harvard and majored in Spanish until his father forced him to switch to economics, deeming Spanish "too frivolous."

Monrad is a wry observer of human nature. On the subject of arrogance, he says, "A friend was working on a PhD thesis. John Kenneth Galbraith, the Harvard economist, was judging it and said to my friend, 'Young man, only two living people can do irony well: George Bernard Shaw and me.'" And about Winston Churchill, one of Monrad's heroes, he tells this story: "Shaw sent a note to Churchill: 'Here's two tickets for my opening night. Bring a friend if you have one.' Churchill responded, 'Send two for the second night, if you have one.'"

Monrad went to the University of Virginia School of Law and then into the Army's Third Armored Division at Fort Knox, where, among other things, he instructed in the use of the .45-caliber pistol.

"After the Army I practiced law in Boston in a time (the early '50s) when beginning lawyers in New York started at $4,800 a year. It was $3,600 in Boston."

He specialized in wills and trusts, and early in his career he met Hollis Nichols, whose family had a wool business and who also ran an office that concentrated on stock investments. This became Northeast Investors Trust, a mutual fund established to diversify out of the wool side of the family business. When it began in 1950, the fund was all stocks. The value at the time was approximately $4 million.

"Hollis Nichols interviewed me. I looked out of the window and said to him, 'Nice view.' Mr. Nichols said, chilling me to the bone, 'Young man. I didn't make my money by looking out of the window.'" But he hired Monrad anyway.

Northeast Investors Trust has one of the best long-term track records of any high-yield bond manager in America.

"Instant success all this time," Monrad smiles. "It took us 30 years to get to $400 million. And in '97 we hit a billion."

Monrad is known as a bond man. But he loves stocks more. "Most bonds are terrible investments, which no one ever writes about. Inflation has been a killer over time. The 1913 dollar is today worth a nickel. The 1945 dollar is worth nine cents. The 1980 dollar is worth 50 cents. Stocks have given you real inflation protection over the years. No contest versus bonds."

Here are some of his thoughts—advice after a lifetime in money management:

- Buy companies that are making money.
- Buy something that somebody needs.
- Never go for fads. They don't last. Forget the "hula hoop" mentality.
- If you don't understand a business, don't buy it.
- CNBC is in the entertainment—not advice—business.
- About bonds: With interest rates where they are, high-yield bonds are the only shot you have for maintaining value versus inflation.
- About investing abroad: This isn't what most of you know or understand. And you have three big risks: political, legal and currency.
- About children and money: The younger generation, with their children, doesn't seem to know the word "no." He also says, "Go first-class or your children will." And: "Being of sound mind, I spent it all." He also advises college students to major in English or history. "Because if you can write, it's 90 percent of the game."

I ask Monrad for some parting words, and he stays wry to the finish. "Well," he smiles, "I believe in what Oscar Wilde said. 'I can resist anything except temptation.'" IB

Soroff ON

MAYA ANGELOU

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

World-renowned civil rights activist, poet, playwright, author, actor, composer, dancer, singer, director and producer Dr. Maya Angelou is one of the great orators of our time and will speak at the Boston Opera House May 31. Born Marguerite Johnson in St. Louis, Mo., she grew up there and in Arkansas, where she attended school before furthering her education in California. Her autobiographical novel I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings (1969) was nominated for a National Book Award, and her prolific career as a poet resulted in a Pulitzer Prize nomination for Just Give Me a Cool Drink of Water 'fore I Diiie (1971). A mentor to Oprah Winfrey, she has won three Grammy Awards and numerous honorary degrees and accolades. In 1959, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. asked her to become the northern coordinator for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. Angelou was appointed to the Bicentennial Commission by President Ford and to the Commission for International Woman of the Year by President Carter. In a lifetime of firsts, she was the first black female director in Hollywood, and she has written, produced, directed and starred in stage, television and film productions. In 1993, she became the second poet in U.S. history to recite her work at a presidential inauguration when she read "On the Pulse of the Morning" for Bill Clinton. She lives in North Carolina.

Jonathan Soroff: Do you consider yourself a Renaissance woman?

Maya Angelou: I don't think of myself in the third person at all.

JS: You have worn so many hats: poet, playwright, activist.... How do you see yourself?

MA: Sometimes when I pray, I will say to God, "Remember me? The six-foot-tall black woman, an American, who writes? Remember?"

JS: So you think you'll be remembered first and foremost as a writer?

MA: Oh, I don't know about that. Some years ago, an interviewer asked me: "If you were going to die today, what would you like as your last meal?" I said, "I can't think of it that way. I can imagine if I was going to Mars and not coming back for a little while, what would I like. And then, I could respond. I'd want to have a hot roast chicken, a nice bottle of good white wine, a loaf of really good bread and a little salad." That's making me hungry now thinking about it.

JS: You've been such a role-model and inspiration for a generation of African-American women—

MA: And white American women.

JS: ...and white American women. Does the weight of that ever feel like a burden?

MA: Oh, no. It's a blessing. Now mind you, with the blessing there's a concomitant responsibility. So you have to be tryin' to tell the truth and live a particular kind of life so that you're living what you're saying. I don't think I asked for it, but I certainly am grateful for it.

JS: Who is your favorite poet of all time?

MA: What time is it? [Laughs.] It depends on the time of day. I love Paul Laurence Dunbar, one of the great poets of the 19th century. I enjoy and use different women. I like Edna St. Vincent Millay, a white American woman. I like Sonia Sanchez, a contemporary, and [Tonya] Marie Evans is certainly a favorite. But I don't know. I like Shakespeare—in particular, the sonnets. The exquisite economy with great poetry, the ability to say all that in those few lines.

"I DON'T KNOW ABOUT SUPERSTITIONS. I HAVE WAYS OF BEING. SUPERSTITION SOUNDS LIKE MUMBO-JUMBO."

JS: What poem of yours are you most proud of?

MA: You scare me with that, Mr. Soroff. All comparisons become odious. It just depends on which one is nearest to my hand or my heart or what was the poem I was thinking of most recently. I like to see the way "Phenomenal Woman" is of use to all kinds of women all over the world. I like the inaugural poem I wrote for Mr. Clinton. Then I was asked to write a poem for the United Nations, for the world, and that's a favorite. But those are big poems, and I have small poems. I have a friend whose husband used to be a run-about, almost blatantly, and I wanted to write a poem about him. I wrote about three foolscap pages, yellow pads, and then I kept reducing it. In the end, I pared it down to six lines, and they are: "Funky blues/Keen toed shoes/High water pants/Saddy night dance/Red soda water/And anybody's daughter." The irony about that is that six months after the book was published, he said to me, "Sister, you write great poetry, but I must tell you my favorite one is 'Country Lover,'" and that's him. [Laughs.]

JS: What are your writing superstitions or rituals?

MA: I don't know about superstitions. I have ways of being. Superstition sounds like mumbo-jumbo. I have a very large house, but I keep a hotel room when I'm writing. In that room I have yellow pads, ballpoint pens, Roget's Thesaurus, the dictionary, the Bible and a bottle of good sherry. I try to start to work by six in the morning, so I get there about 5:30, and I will work until midday, but only if the work is happening. Then I go home. I have never slept overnight in one of those rooms.

JS: Have you ever experienced writer's block?

MA: I suppose so, but I just won't give it that name. I just say that I'm having a difficult time. And then what I do is I cook. I'll go into the kitchen maybe about midnight and start to cook something really complicated, like, oh, a Napoleon or cream puffs. Because I respect the ingredients, and I respect the people who are going to eat it, myself first. I think about the people who will not have that particular luxury. I put everything away except the food I'm preparing. When I'm finished, maybe three or four hours later, and I've cleaned up the kitchen and I've put the pastry into the fridge, I go up to bed and realize I've forgotten all about what would have been called a block. And then the next morning, I get up and I go to work.

JS: When you see yourself in a performance, is it strange?

MA: I try not to. I always say, "I thought I was smaller and shorter."

JS: What books are currently on your nightstand?

MA: I'm reading two books, again. One is by a Canadian writer, Margaret Visser, called Much Depends Upon Dinner. It's a wonderful book, and I buy it almost by the gross. I buy eight or 10 of them and give them to friends. I'm also reading a book by Jedediah Purdy called For Common Things.

JS: Is Oprah Winfrey the greatest thing since sliced bread?

MA: She's a wonderful woman, and a marvelous daughter. She's a sweet girl, a brilliant host and a sincere philanthropist. But I don't know about the sliced bread.

JS: Who do you admire?

MA: My grandmother, first of all, and after her, my mother. Mary McLeod Bethune. Eleanor Roosevelt. Anne Spencer. There are lots.

JS: One thing people would be surprised to learn about you?

MA: That I took a course in aviation. I never got my pilot's license, but I took the course out in Wichita, Kan.

JS: Any guilty pleasures—romance novels, cheesy reality TV shows?

MA: I'm a sucker for the British mysteries on the BBC, Poirot especially.

JS: OK, on a more serious note: You hear a lot about the arts in education. Can you really separate the two?

MA: [Chuckles.] Nice. That's very nice. No, you can't really.

JS: To me, the arts are education.

MA: That's very true. I had not thought of it that way, but it's true. People always talk of arts and science, and when people talk about the sciences as being more important than the arts, they make a terrible mistake, because they may get some facts but they'll never get the truth. They may get the times when or the reasons why and the methods how and blah, blah, blah, but they'll never get to the human truth. That's what art does.

JS: Last question. Finish this poem: Roses are red, violets are blue. Dr. Angelou is a Renaissance woman and _____

MA: So are you. IB

Maria Menounos, 28, is sitting pretty. Not just at the IMPROPER's May 4 cover shoot, where her looks make our job easy, but in general. Menounos—a celebrity by way of Medford, Mass.—has reached the professional point where she can play multiple roles. For her, shifting gears from actress to reporter to filmmaker is all in a day's work.

Seriously. Take May 4. She's awake at 5 am. First comes hair and makeup, then interviews with two morning shows. (Fox's Mike and Juliet give her Green Monster memorabilia, which she later confirms "was so cool.") Next up: a three-hour radio tour followed by the IMPROPER cover shoot and segments for NBC's Access Hollywood. Menounos fits in a quick B12 shot (gotta stay healthy) before putting on her producer hat and handing out flyers to promote In the Land of Merry Misfits at the Tribeca Film Festival. "I kept trying to steal Spider-Man's business," Menounos jokes. She skips dinner in favor of a nap, ending her marathon at the Misfits premiere.

The premiere proves a highlight. Menounos joined forces with writer/director Keven Undergaro on the film as an Emerson College undergrad back when e-mail was new. "Seeing it on the big screen for the first time was better than anything [I] could have imagined," she says of Misfits, about a young man's quest for the "grail of popularity." Afterward, "people were [quoting] me lines from the movie." Menounos hopes to show it at the Boston Film Festival and to find a distributor. "Otherwise I'm going to do it myself [and] rent out theaters," she says matter-of-factly.

It's that attitude that fuels her success. In addition to moviemaking and serving as a special correspondent for Access Hollywood, she appears frequently on Today and does humanitarian work. Menounos also acts on television and in film, recently starring in Kickin It Old Skool with Jamie Kennedy. Right now, she's kickin' around future projects, including one in Boston, and has teamed with Undergaro on an Internet sitcom. A former Miss Massachusetts Teen USA, she has graced beautiful-people lists. Her grail of popularity, to say the least, seems secure. — Megan Lisagor

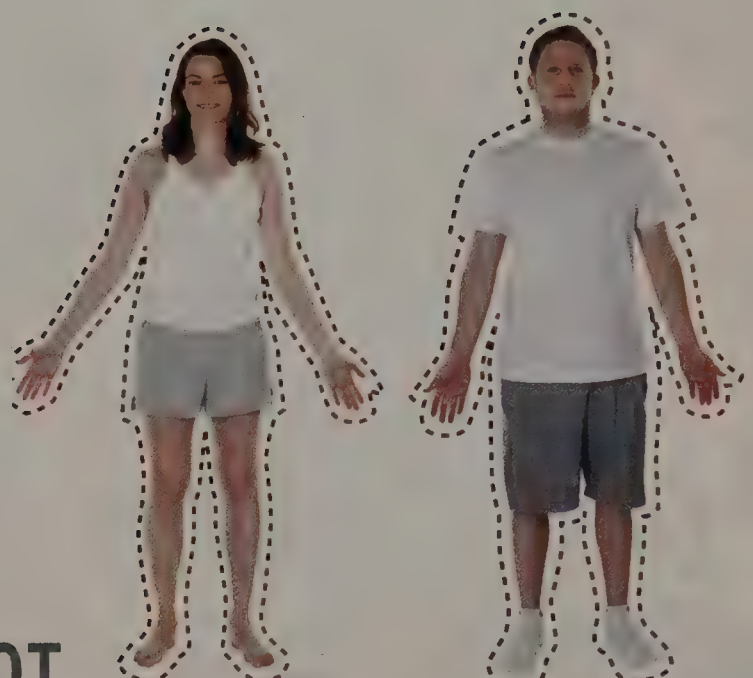
AN IMPROPER GUIDE TO BECOMING...



A CHICK/DUDE MAGNET

ATTRACTING major attention from the opposite sex is a snap with our dating tips. From fashion, perfume and overnight dos and don'ts to dealbreaking tales that'll scare the bad behavior right out of you, we've got all the bases covered. Will you hit a home-run? Now that's up to you, kids. Go get 'em.

WE WANT YOU TO MASTER THE ART OF SEDUCTION.

WHO'S GOT THE LOOK?

Which outfits turn the most heads at Boston bars? Two staffers bravely test out four very different styles.

We're not scientists. And we're certainly not "experts" on the dating scene (though we like to think we could give better advice than Dr. Phil). But it doesn't take a PsyD to know that when you're out on the town, the way you dress says a lot about who you are to prospective mates/dates/hookups. Curious about which looks get the most mileage in Boston, we unleashed two staffers—one male, one female—on the bar scene, dressed in four very different getups. Are men more drawn to a pretty-in-pink prepster or a gangsta bitch in booty shorts? Do women pay more attention to a dude in a sophisticated suit or laid-back hipster threads? What follow are our brave researchers' trials and tribulations, gleaned without any controls or meticulous data-gathering procedures in place. But real-life experience has to count for something, right?

By Rich Levine and Katie Noble | Photographs by Tony Scarpetta

Styling by Erin Charest/Ennis Inc. All clothing provided by Macy's.

SHE SAYS: Assuming the identity of peppy prepster, I hit the town in search of the kind of action that'd make the girls at the country club jealous. Trips to Vox and the Cactus Club have potential until my identity is blown by friends hanging out at both spots. But Sonsie brings the goods. Sitting at the crowded bar, my partner-in-crime Nicole and I are chatted up by a pair of recent college grads, and after about 10 minutes an older man interrupts us to let me know I have "that look, that look that [he] likes," a comment that's interesting (in terms of this story) and creepy (in terms of creepiness). As the night winds down, the bartender presents Nicole and me with a pair of free shots. "It's something I only give to female patrons I prefer," he tells us. Conclusion: It's easy to be pink and green.

HE SAYS: Sporting a bright yellow polo, carefully draped over a navy button-down shirt and a palm tree tie, I feel more like Caddyshack's Judge Smails than a guy expecting to impress a few ladies—but that's what I try to do over the course of a night that includes stops at Silverton Beantown Pub and No. 9 Park. Conversation is solid and I feel like the presence (and possibly the brightness) of my well-assembled preppiness gives off the impression that I have my shit together; plus yellow isn't a very intimidating color. Conclusion: Even if I'm not quite comfortable with my outfit, the ladies seem to be

Like a pair of paper dolls, two intrepid staffers changed clothes and personas over the course of a week. Let's just say neither one walked away with a new look—or a new significant other.

BUSINESS

HE SAYS: The afterwork ene at Cottonwood is romising for high-powered athryn. The crowded bar is lled with suits, and who etter to woo them than a ke-minded businesswoman esh from a day of playing ne markets? So wrong. A ouple of drinks in, and e've yet to get a glance om the suits. In fact, they em to be averting their yes. We up the stakes and rike up a conversation ith the man next to us. To y he's mildly interested ould be a wild overatement. We chalk up the ss and move down to Via latta, where not much is ifferent. Conclusion: It's ough out there for a high-ass hoochie.

HIPSTER

HE SAYS: I head over to Boylston Street after work in my designer navy suit and quickly realize one thing: There are a lot of guys out there who wear suits to work every day. Of all my outfits, the banker ensemble draws the least attention. It's the most common, and hence the most boring. I sit down at the bar at Vox, and I'm immediately carded by the bartender—so much for the respect you'd expect to accompany such a high-powered outfit. We move down to the Cactus Club and are seated next to a table of three women who seem appalled when I try to make conversation. But before my self-esteem dips too low, I'm saved by the sight of one these women running her hand up the side of her friend's leg and eventually down the front of her dress. Conclusion: It doesn't count as a failure if they're playing for the other team.

SHE SAYS: KT loves the Smiths and pines for a hep cat with a messenger bag and koi fish tattoos, but will the men of Beacon Hill embrace her? We walk into the very crowded bar at 75 Chestnut and grab a table next to a group of guys in casual business attire; this has potential. It doesn't take long for Jorge, a regular here who's drinking solo, to find us. He buys us a round of drinks and provides some solid company, but Jorge aside, KT the hipster isn't a total hit. The men at the next table never give more than a glance, and KT heads home to check out the new Le Tigre album she bought earlier this afternoon. Conclusion: Hipsters face a steep climb on the Hill.

HE SAYS: I sit down for dinner at Harvard Gardens and feel more comfortable than I have in any other outfit. That's partly because it's the closest to my real-life style (which actually leans more toward hobo), but whatever the reason, my confidence is up and, in turn, my sociability. After dinner, where the waitress seems to take a liking to my hipster stylings, my wingman Carl and I bounce around the Hill—from Harvard Gardens to the Sevens to the Beacon Hill Pub to the Hill Tavern—like rock stars. Not that girls are flocking to us and buying us drinks (does that even happen in pornos?), but my mood is good. Conclusion: Do I need a new wardrobe?

HIP-HOP

SHE SAYS: Look at that girl with the Daisy Dukes on... Seriously, look at her, she's me, and I'm walking into Saint, feeling mighty uncomfortable. Eyes—of both the male and female variety—are fixing on my hip-hop stylings. I walk up to the crowded bar and immediately get a male bartender's attention. This could be kind of fun. Men pass by and don't bother to hide their stares; a couple even stop to chat. They're a lot more forward tonight than they've been on any other. And it's all the result of an outfit that could've been purchased at HookerGear. com. After Saint, we head to the Pour House, the antithesis of hoop earrings and short-shorts. It goes about as awkwardly as I expected. The eyes are still on me, but they're judging eyes. Conclusion: Beware where you shake it.

HE SAYS: Just a few minutes into my night out wearing K-Fed–inspired threads, and one thing's obvious: Every guy who sees me clearly wants to kick my ass. (When I walk by a mirror in the bathroom at Clerys, I want to kick my own ass.) For all the talk about cattiness among women, this reaction from the guys is worth noting. As for my social success? It's hard out there for a pimp. From Clerys down to the Rattlesnake and over to City Bar, girls are far more frightened of this gangsta than they are interested. Conclusion: Too bad Britney's in rehab.

LET'S SPEND THE NIGHT TOGETHER

If you want your date to stay, try these simple moves.
By Victoria Groves

Carrie Bradshaw identified three important firsts in a relationship: the first time you have sex, the first time you have good sex and the first time you see his apartment. Boston might not be Manhattan, but getting that special someone into the sack still means opening up your apartment. If you want to boost your odds, set the mood with just the right music, movie, food and drink. A little preparation can help ensure a happy ending, and maybe even breakfast the next morning.

LOOKIN' GOOD

Even if you don't have the wherewithal to redecorate your apartment, small changes can spruce up your living space. Once you've taken care of the no-brainers, like moving the dirty underwear from the floor to the hamper (or at least kicking it under the bed), your love life might benefit from a few easy touches.

Overhead lighting, let it be known, can be extremely unflattering, according to architectural psychology consultant Linda Varone of Arlington. Your bulbs should be soft fluorescent (40 to 60 watts) so they don't cast dark shadows on your face or around your apartment. "It shouldn't be so bright that you can do surgery in there, but you don't want to guide your date into a black hole," says Varone, a feng shui exper Even better, use lamps instead of overhead lights or a dimmer to take it down about a third. Or, if you have one, work the fireplace angle.

Speaking of that, consider what you hav on your mantelpiece; your living room says a lot about your social life. Snapshots of family and friends show you like to socialize, while the lone recliner planted directly in front of your flat-screen TV would indicate… the opposite. "Aside fror hiding the dirty books and movies, don't b too concerned that you'll be overanalyzed, Varone says. "It's important that you have things in your space that remind you of the people, places and events that are important to you."

When your date arrives, you have to decide whether to give the grand tour. It's not always necessary, especially if you aren sure whether you want to have a sleepover "Whether you're given a tour is an indication of where the evening will go," says Scott Bleier, a 33-year-old attorney living in the Back Bay. "If she shows you the bedroom and the bed, that's usually a good sign."

A surprisingly bad subliminal sign is a bed that's pushed up against the wall, according to Varone. "Make sure the bed i set up so two can access it, not up against the wall," she says. "That sends the mixed message that 'I'm here, but I'm not really allowing you to get in the bed.'"

SMART FOOD

Lucky for those of us who flounder in the kitchen or are time-pressed, Boston offers plenty of alternatives for impressing a date with hors d'oeuvres or even a full-blown meal. Shops like Whole Foods and Savenor Market provide upscale prepared foods, an Whole Foods offers recipes with minimal ingredients that still taste like they require t least some skill to create. Sure it's just a ajita kit. But you can take all the credit. It's not cheating," says Chuck Olivieri, Whole Foods marketing team leader at the ymphony location. "A lot of really good ooks do this because they just don't have ne time to make a full meal."

Somerville's Danielle Festino, 25, offers nother easy Boston solution: invite your ate over to watch a Red Sox game. Beer, urgers—and the night practically plans self. "If there's no chemistry or one of you n't interested, you can watch the game," ne says. "Or vice versa, you can ignore the ame very easily, too."

IIX IT UP

's one thing to order her a raspberry ojito when you meet at a bar. It's quite nother to be able to muddle and mix at our apartment. Start with a few essentials nd hope your date doesn't ask for anything o complicated. Kim Rubin, event planner Vox Populi, always has staples including ght beer, champagne and bottles of pinot oir or pinot grigio stocked in her home ar. "Good vodka and matching wine asses are also a good start," Rubin says. "If someone tries to serve you a martini in a paper cup, run—don't walk—away."

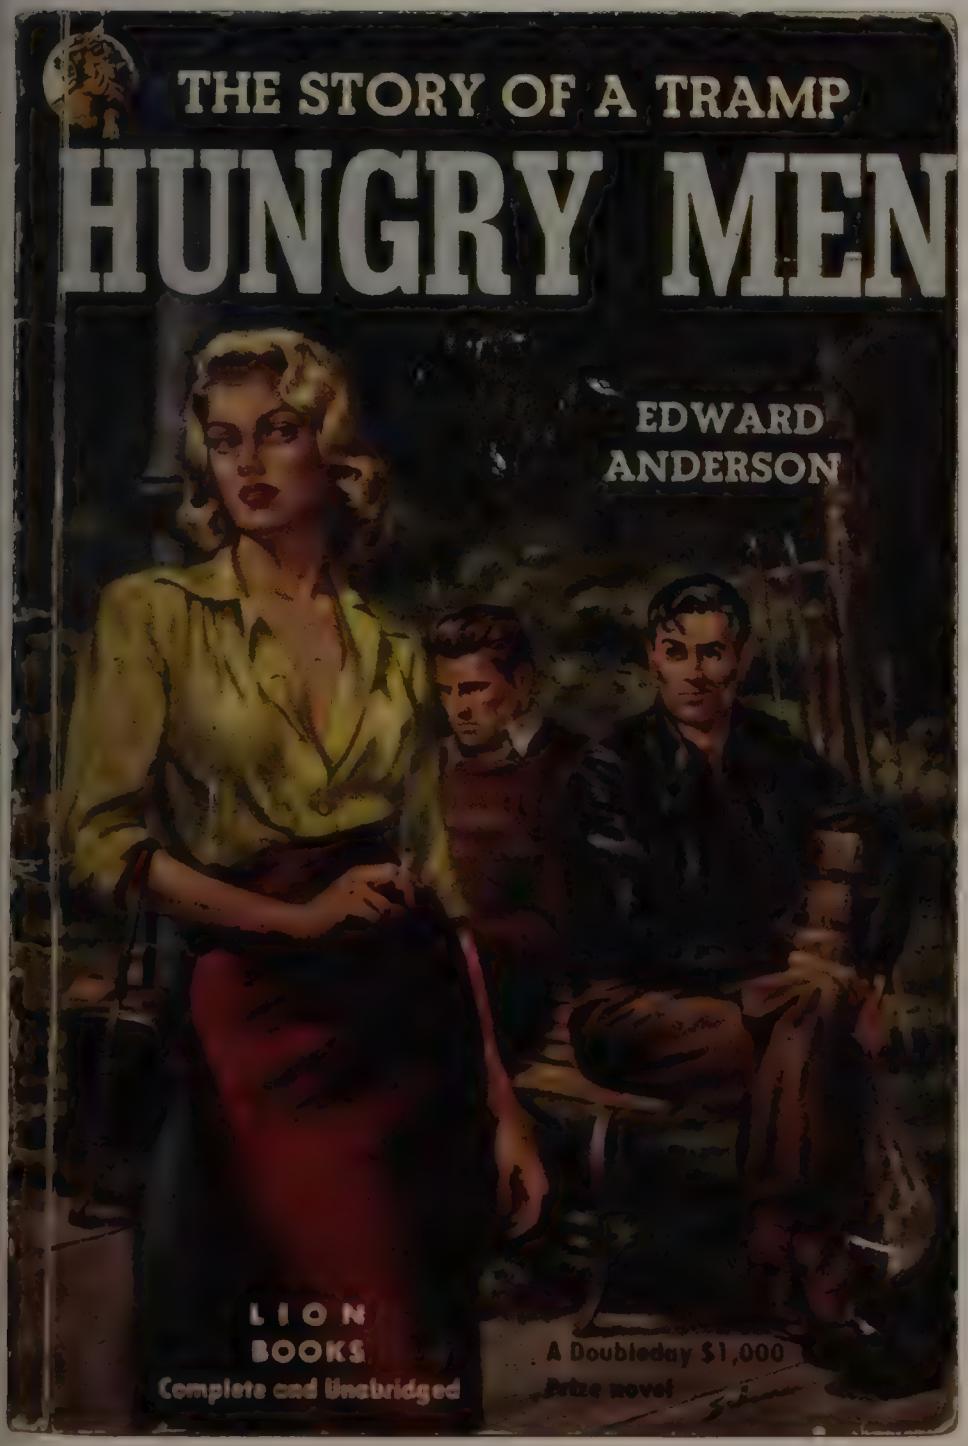
But her secret weapon is Stirrings, a cocktail mixer line out of Fall River offering shortcuts to everything from mango margaritas to chocolate peppermintinis. "If you're going to make a cocktail, you have to do it right," she says. "If you've got rum, tequila and vodka in your house and some basic mixers, there's not a lot you can't do."

SIGHTS AND SOUNDS

Aside from art on the wall and snapshots scattered around your pad, your music and movies might reveal the most about your personality. Dates will browse, guaranteed. Pat McGrath, owner of Looney Tunes Records on Boylston Street, suggests starting with something neutral like a solo piano or bossa nova recording and then letting them select from your collection. "Leave a lot of stuff lying around," McGrath says. "You won't seem like you're controlling the situation, and yet you are.

"If it's a woman, you're looking to charm her," he continues. "If it's a man, it doesn't matter. As Henry Rollins said, 'All you want to hear are belt buckles hitting the floor.'"

Both Kristin Casasanto, 30, a career advisor at the New England Institute of Art, and the Back Bay's Bleier use music equipment as conversation starters. "I have a collection of jazz records and an old tube amp," Casasanto says. "I like to show it off, and vinyl is always authentic and classy." She recommends a record called Cat Meets Chick, a 1956 recording of Buck Clayton and his band, along with vocalist Ada Moore.



Bleier suggests the laid-back sound of Tosca, an Austrian DJ duo, or the Brand New Heavies for a more loungy vibe. While he may do some advance preparation like having wood in the fireplace and champagne on ice, he plays the night by ear. "The key is not to go into it right away," he says. "Wait about 10 minutes and pay attention to the subtle hints, like whether she takes her shoes off" when she walks in.

Once you settle in on the couch to watch a flick, you don't want your movie choice to bomb. Stay away from the tearjerkers and action pictures, but a romantic comedy like The Holiday or Fever Pitch might work in your favor.

McGrath thinks that older films like Casablanca and Alfred Hitchcock's Notorious are better picks. "There is no subtlety in modern movies," he says. Older ones "don't beat the love story over your head." If quirk is more your style, try something by the Coen brothers, he suggests, like The Big Lebowski or Fargo.

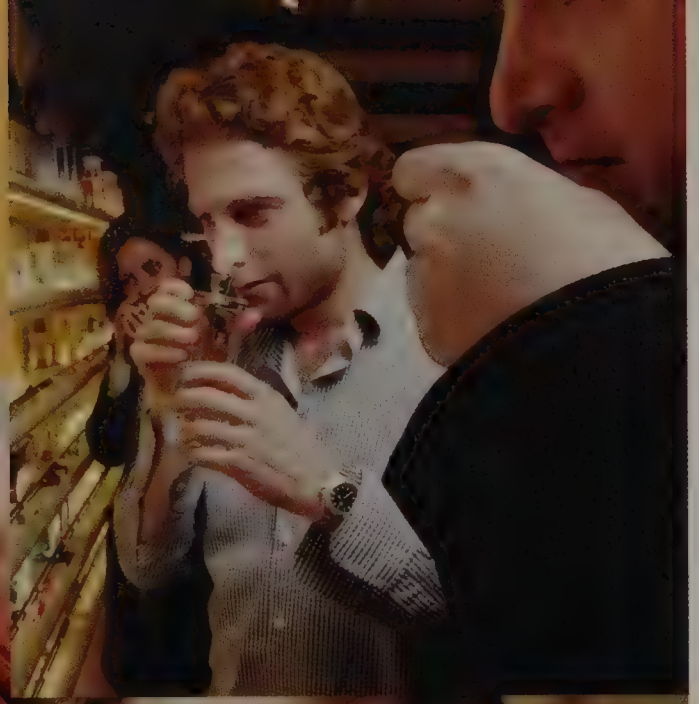
DON'T FAKE IT

Above all, be yourself. Trite, but true. Faking it is bad—in all situations. Stock your place with "cool" albums and wines you know nothing about, and you're bound to look lame. "Whatever you're into, slap your passions around the joint," McGrath says. "If she's going to hate you, just face it and get honestly rejected."

Crib Notes



If you're hoping the date you've got lined up for Saturday night will turn into Sunday morning brunch, take a few minutes to fix up the place. Here are some quick-and-easy steps to maximize your apartment's sleepover potential.

- Stash all bathroom reading material under the sink. Your date will only wonder how much time you spend in there, and why.
- Give roommates the heads-up. They don't need to find another place to stay that night, but at least they'll tread a little more softly coming up the stairs.
- Tidy up. Emptying the overflowing trash in your kitchen, cleaning the hair out of the sink and putting a new roll of toilet paper in the bathroom go a long way.
- Have a spare toothbrush and contact lens case available, but offer them only if asked.
- Clean out the litter box. Enough said.
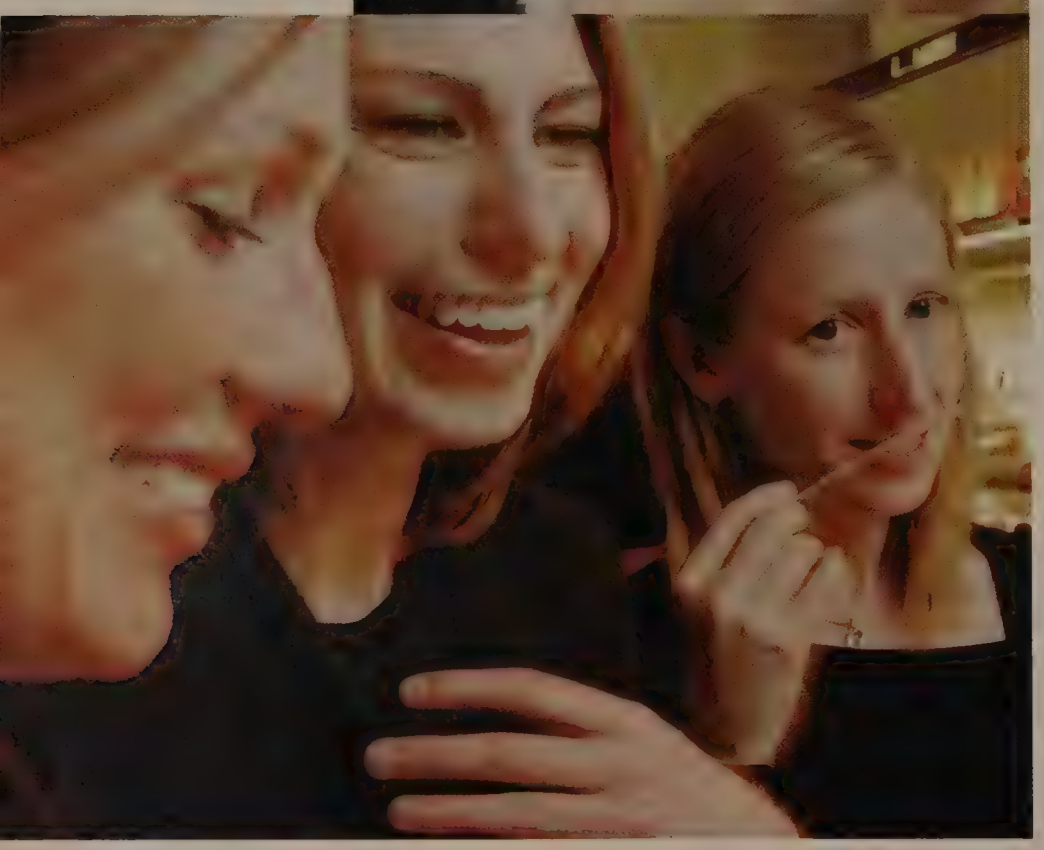
- Suck up any dust bunnies with a vacuum, especially if you've recently rearranged your bedroom.
- Cover the stained futon with a blanket. A slipcover or sheet may seem dorm-like, but it's better than trying to explain any spots on the upholstery.



Likewise, don't create any unrealistic expectations. Unless you moonlight as a professional house cleaner or a gourmet cook, your space and the food needn't be perfect. "I've dated enough to know that being something you're not is a waste of time," Casasanto says. "I'm neat but not a clean freak. I don't want to set up the expectation that I live that way." IB

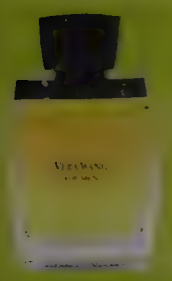
GET A WHIFF OF THIS

Which perfumes and colognes actually drive guys and gals wild? We assembled a team of opinionated Bostonians to sniff out the winners and losers.

By Ezra Dyer | Photographs by Laura Barisonzi

It's a subjective question, and an intensely personal one: What smells good? As anyone who's ridden the T can attest, the denizens of this city have widely varying tastes when it comes to fragrance. Some people are content with Right Guard, some have a cabinet full of designer perfumes, some pick a scent and stick with it for years. But if you're in the market for a new perfume or cologne, or even if you're just looking for a gift, is there any such thing as a can't-miss? Likewise, are there stink bombs out there that are borderline biological weapons? To get a layman's overview of the current fragrance offerings, we assembled a team of 12 Bostonians—five men and seven women—and set them loose at Sephora at the Prudential Center to find out what passes the sniff test. At the end of the night, their olfactory receptors fried, our testers couldn't tell the difference between the smell of a Fenway Frank and Frank Stallone. But along the way, some clear favorites and duds emerged in the battle for Boston's noses.

WOMEN ON MEN'S FRAGRANCES



First, our team of women descends on the men's cologne. As someone who can make a single bottle of cologne last for decades, I'm curious to find out if there's a big favorite—maybe I could splurge on an upgrade. Kathryn comes out of the gate with some strong opinions: Dunhill is the most masculine, Burberry smells like bug spray and Polo Green makes her want to get as far away as possible from whoever's wearing Polo Green. But overall, she wonders what makes the men's colognes, well, manly: "They all smell like women's perfume."

Lysa and Tracey like the Issey Miyake—at least for guys who are going to change their cologne as the evening progresses. "This is the cocktail hour scent," Tracey says. "From four to six in the evening, with a gin and tonic in your hand, this works." "Then you go home and wash it off," Lysa adds.

Tracey gives Valentino high marks for a old-school vibe. "This is stereotypically masculine. It's very throwback—like a 1950s man, this is the way he'd smell." Le stereotypically masculine: cologne from a purveyor of wedding dresses. "Some of these you wouldn't let your boyfriend buy just because of the image—that's Vera Wang," Catherine says. About Angel, she says, "I like it for me." Besides the scent, even the bottle, a glass star, looks girly.

There's common enthusiasm for John Varvatos, which a salesman informs us contains "notes of leather." Lysa says, "It smells clean." Bvlgari gets a mixed review "You can only pull this off if you're a 50-year-old Italian tycoon," says Tracey, adding, "It makes me nauseous."

Men say: "I can't imagine having this in your apartment. I can't compete with that bulge." —John ver on the other side of the store, two of e guys are getting a whiff of the women's rsion of Angel. While Catherine thought e men's Angel smelled girly, these guys ink the female Angel smells manly. "It's o musky," John says. "You could almost e yourself wearing it." I ask a nearby lesman if he thinks the idea of men's ents and women's scents is mere arketing, anyway. It turns out he's earing a mixture of two women's perfumes at, when combined, end up smelling anly. Which either answers my question confuses me even more. I haven't cided yet.

The guys seem preoccupied by the ttles. For instance, Brendan singles out orange bottle of Hermès Eau des lerveilles. "I kinda like the fruitiness," he ys. A moment later, Brendan is holding Orange by Masaki Matsushima. "I like this one, too," he says. I point out that his two favorites so far are both in orange bottles. "Maybe I like the bottles," he says. Jamin admits that his opinions depend, to some extent, on the design of the bottles. "I'm intrigued by the looks of them, which is a bad reason, probably," he says.

Juicy Couture draws the ire of John and Jamin. "It's shite," says Jamin. John opines, "It's a mixture of snot and Play-Doh." Ralph Lauren Romance, however, appears to be a hit. John, Jamin and Anmol all like it. Anmol says, "A lot of these smell like they could go 50-50, men or women. This is very light and girly." Anmol also likes Lacoste. "It doesn't smell like much. Less is more." While Vera Wang for men drew skepticism from the ladies, the men have no such problem with her perfume, Princess. Says Brendan, "The Vera Wang smells just like cake batter. It's really good." Mmm… cake. Dior Hypnotic Poison is singled out as not so good. The guys recruit a random woman walking past to get a female opinion on the Hypnotic Poison. "It smells like rotting fruit," she says. Well, I give Dior credit for their honesty. It's not like it's called Hypnotic Deliciousness.

Lysa and Tracey's idea of a fragrance corresponding to a particular time of day is reiterated, this time by Anmol about 212 Sexy. "This one's a winner for me. It's very evening, sexy. This is an evening scent." So, ladies, if you're looking for a new scent, it would appear that men like stuff that smells like fruit and cake batter. Food good! Man like woman smell like food!

MEN ON MEN'S FRAGRANCES

Polo Green, scorned by Kathryn, comes under even harsher fire from the guys than it does from the women. "I used to wear the Green in junior high," Anmol says. "That stuff is awful." "That's old-man," Brendan says. John elaborates on the Polo hierarchy. "Green is for a 60-year-old. Blue is for a 50-year-old. Black is the youngest-smelling."

Brendan and John take the definition further, going on a tirade about Polo Blue. "It's for the guy in the gym in his 40s before he jumps in the minivan to go pick up the kids," Brendan says. "Yeah," John agrees. "He puts that on before a night on the town, to go big." They laugh. I refrain from mentioning that I wear Polo Blue.

The John Varvatos, which the women liked, isn't such a winner with the men, who find it almost too aggressively lumberjack-ish. "Very woodsy and outdoorsy," Anmol says. John adds, "This says, 'I drive a Subaru Outback and I'm going up to Vermont for the weekend. And then I'm climbing Mount Kilimanjaro.'"

Tracey's "50-year-old Italian tycoon" Bvlgari comment is reprised by the men. "Smells like money," Anmol says. "If you're not rich, put this shit on."

Whatever Jean Paul Gaultier's cologne may smell like, the guys can't get past the Le Male bottle, which is shaped like an anatomically correct male torso and puts a new meaning to the term "packaging." "I can't imagine having this in your apartment," John says. "I can't compete with that bulge."

This isn't the only case where judgment begins and ends before the scent itself is even sampled. According to its literature, the Vera Wang for Men fragrance "begins with an unexpected burst of freshness created by green mandarin leaf and crisp yuzu zest." But none of our guys got to the mandarin leaf—let alone the yuzu zest—because they were too weirded out by a cologne from a designer known for wedding gowns above all else. "What kind of message are you sending with that?" John wonders. "You're gonna be on a first date wearing Vera Wang? Yeah, you're ready for the wedding."

The knock on Angel cologne—that it smells like perfume—comes up again with the men. I'm beginning to wonder if maybe the bottles got mixed up between the men's and women's sections. "It's way too girly," says Anmol. The bottle or the smell, I ask? "Both." Angel has a definite gender-identity problem.

So what do the guys actually like for themselves? Anmol is a fan of Kenneth Cole Black. "Light, but masculine." I do a quick survey of what these guys already wear. The list includes Hugo Boss, Emporio Armani, Lacoste and Issey Miyake. Dunhill wins points for its subtlety. "I can't even smell it," Anmol says. "Pretty subtle," John agrees.

WOMEN ON WOMEN'S FRAGRANCES

If Le Male's bottle threw off the men, the women have the same problem with the Gaultier perfume, which, like the cologne, comes in a shapely bottle. "I feel kinda pervy picking up the boobie bottle," Beth says. Lysa likes Toca Touch. Catherine votes for Coco Mademoiselle, which she wears. Dior Hypnotic Poison is under fire, again. "How could such a good designer come up with such a bad perfume?" Catherine wonders. "Ewww… I got it on my finger," Brenna says.

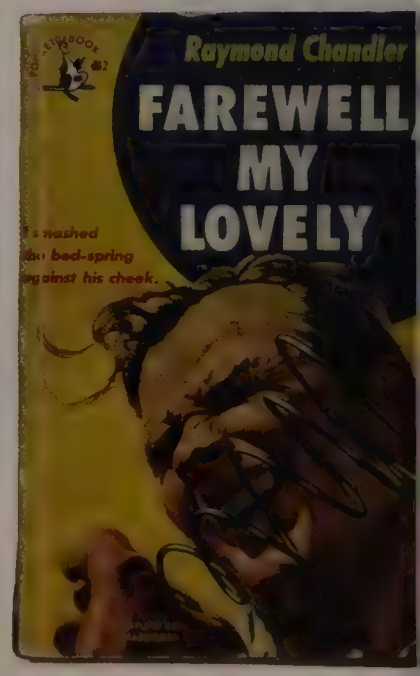
Everyone seems to agree that Hermès Eau des Merveilles smells nice, making it a winner with men and women. Guerlain Herba Fresca scores points for smelling like cut grass. Also finding favor are Valentino Rockin' Rose and Escada Sunset, although the latter's popularity may be more a function of the festive box (which is emblazoned with a retina-scalding sunset beach scene) than the scent itself. "We all really like Escada Sunset," Tracey says. "It reminds us of having a Malibu and pineapple. It's like a party in a box. Either that, or a party on the box, and you don't want to open it. But $70 is a lot to spend on a box you don't want to open."

It's possible that by this point, the fumes are starting to affect our testers, a possibility that becomes more certain when Kathryn describes 212 Sexy as smelling "like Britney Spears," and she doesn't clarify whether she means Britney Spears the fragrance or Britney Spears the head-shaving, rehab-hopping train wreck. "I need to be in a room devoid of smells," Catherine says. "My nose is done."



UPSHOT

If you're a man, buy John Varvatos; if you're outdoorsy, Bvlgari; if you're rocking the rich-guy vibe; and Dunhill if you're looking for something not too in-your-face. If you're a woman, it seems like you can't go wrong with the Hermès Eau des Merveilles.

Beyond that? Scent aside, physical presentation and cultural connotations weighed heavily in perceptions. For instance, men and women agreed that Vera Wang cologne makes about as much sense as Black & Decker perfume. Neither sex could get past the Gaultier bottles, aka the Boobies and the Bulge. Everyone perceived Escada Sunset as festive, which was as much a function of its brightly colored box as its fruity scent. Subtlety is good no matter who you are. If you wear Polo Green, it might be time to go shopping. And if you wear Polo Blue, then I'll see you out on the town, because I only wear that when the minivan's parked for the night and I'm going big. IB

It's a classic line in the dating lexicon. Most of us have heard it or said it. Few of us have believed it or meant it. All of us know how to translate it: "There's something about you that turns me off irrevocably." ■ But when we're on the receiving end of it, we often don't know exactly where we went wrong—what we did or said to break the deal. Sealing the dating deal is often a matter of trial and error. One woman's stinky sloth is another woman's sweet Bohemian. Still, everyone learns by experience—even if it's someone else's really, really awful experience. So here, in the interest of teaching by example, we offer a local oral history of dating dealbreakers, loosely categorized by issue that broke the deal. If you recognize yourself in any of these awkward stories, here's hoping that you'll understand why things ended when they did. And that maybe you'll have better luck next time. (To paraphrase Henny Youngman, if it hurts when you do this, don't do it anymore!)

DEALBREAKER: MY DATE WAS ONLY INTERESTED IN ONE THING

"Tommy asked me out, took me to dinner and proceeded to talk about himself all night. But then he redeemed himself with a phone call an hour after the date ended, saying he realized he had talked about himself all night, and he was so embarrassed, and he wanted to make up for it with another date. So we went out to dinner again... and he proceeded to talk about himself all night." Epilogue: "A few months later, a friend of mine said that she had met a guy who seemed really great, but he had talked about himself nonstop on the date. She told me he had followed up, though, apologizing for talking about himself so much, so she was going to give him another chance. 'Was his name Tommy?' I said. And she said, 'Yeah! "She was a teacher, and her favorite author was Roddy Doyle, and we spent, like, the first hour talking about how much she liked all of Roddy Doyle's books, especially Paddy Clarke Ha Ha Ha. The entire evening was set on the foundation of her correcting me when I mistakenly referred to the author as the title, and my supremely not caring." —Steve, Arlington

DEALBREAKER: MY DATE WAITED TOO LONG TO SHARE CRUCIAL INFORMATION

"He had told me about his job as a restaurant manager, but left out the part about working at a pig farm. As we drove to the restaurant, my perfume, clothes, skin and hair started to smell like the manure scent in his 4x4. I knew before dinner even started that there wasn't going to be a second date." —Kelly, Newport, RI

"There was the woman who didn't tell me she was married… and then there was the other woman who didn't tell me she was married." —Jake, Cambridge

"He told me he had some baggage as he was getting out of the car when I dropped him off in the morning, and he waited until he was outside of the car to tell me that 'baggage' meant two kids and a wife." —Kelly, Brookline

DEALBREAKER: MY DATE SHARED TOO MUCH INFORMATION

"On our first date, he gave me a detailed account of his splenectomy." —Katie, Boston

DEALBREAKER: MY DATE WAS A BAD LISTENER

"I told him I worked for a refugee resettlement agency, and he asked me two minutes later whether I thought we should let refugees into the country." —Daniele, Cambridge

DEALBREAKER: SOMETHING ABOUT THE DATE DIDN'T APPEAL TO MY SENSE OF SIGHT/TOUCH/SMELL

"She had an unfortunate case of fat ankles." —Dan, Cambridge

"He had warts. In his pants." —Corey, Watertown

"His second toes were so much longer than his big toes that they hung out over the end of his Tevas." —Hannah, Somerville

"I found him online. He appealed to me because he said he loved the Muppets. I love the Muppets, too. Everyone I know who likes the Muppets is a good person. When we met for coffee, I realized he really was a Muppet. He bounced up and down when he talked, and he beeped. That wasn't so bad. He was kooky. I like kookiness. But when we sat down together I realized that he had a body odor issue. It wasn't that it was necessarily a bad smell; it was just repellent to me. He told me he had just come from a job, so I thought maybe he smelled from work. He beeped and smelled for the rest of the date, but I kept thinking that I really needed to be less shallow. I could tell he really enjoyed his life, and he was nice and fun and I wanted to give him a chance. But after the third date I realized he wasn't going to stop beeping, and the body odor wasn't going away. [The dealbreaker] was definitely more the smelling than the beeping." —Sophie, Somerville

DEALBREAKER: MY DATE WAS A LITTLE TOO EAGER

"There was the very nice and vulnerable woman who showed up for a blind date the day after her divorce, with her bag packed so that she could spend the night. (The [matchmakers] hadn't mentioned the divorce timing.) I explained that it was generally a good idea not to seem too desperate. She called a week later and invited me to be her escort to a party at her former in-laws' house." —Jake, Cambridge

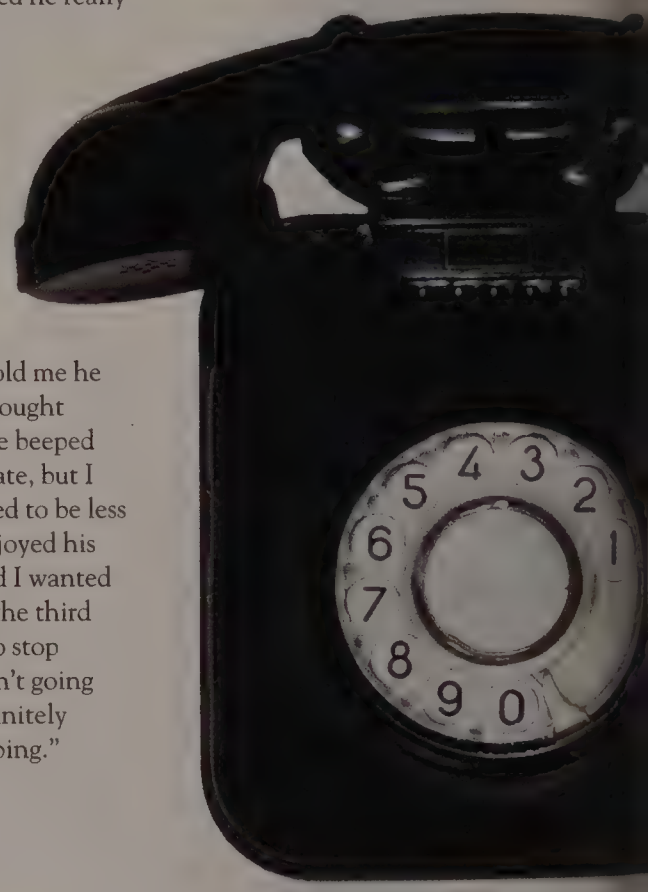
"It was our first date. We were both 24. And before we even got to the movie, he said, 'I think I'm ready to start raising kids.'" —Corey, Watertown

"Between 6:25 and 7 pm, he sent me eight text messages to make sure I was still going to meet him for drinks. 'U there?' 'We still on?' 'On my way!' 'Hope I didn't lose u!'" —Suzanne, Boston

"On vacation, on a Friday morning, I met a hunky man in line at a breakfast joint in the French Quarter. He smiled—it was a fabulous smile—and he politely asked if he could join my group. We ended up having an amazing conversation. He was worldly, compassionate and famous; he was a retired All Pro from the New York Jets! And he called my hotel later that evening to invite me out for dinner at Emeril's the next day. The following morning, he called to say he was so looking forward to our date. He said I should go shopping and pick out something 'real pretty.' He called again later to see if I had any success. I thought I had hit the jackpot. This man was smart, attentive and, best of all, he wanted to talk about shopping! I thought, 'I do!'

"And then I realized he was breathing quite heavily on the other end of the phone.

"And then he asked me, 'What do you have in your hand, baby? What do you have in your hand?'



"And I said, 'Um, the phone receiver?'

"He requested more details. 'Is it big? Is it black?'

"I finally woke up and said, 'Are you trying to have phone sex with me?'

"'This is what we do in the South, baby,' he said. 'This is the Big Easy. We spice things up before the meal. Everything needs a little cayenne pepper on it for a Southern man to really enjoy it.'

"So I never married the New York Jets football star. I never dined at Emeril's. And I never looked at hotel phone receivers the same way." —Hannah, Somerville

JUST SAY NO

William Ury, cofounder of Harvard Law School's Program on Negotiation, shares strategies in The Power of a Positive No.

Coauthor of Getting to Yes William Ury has mined another essential dimension along the Yes Trail, and that's the No part. Having negotiated big-time deals between countries, religious antagonists, corporations and families, Ury "No's" whereof he speaks. Far from being a negative, wimpy or stubborn way of working out disagreements, No is the good granite boundary, declared with dignity, clarity and respect. Its function in the developing plot, however, is to move deliberately through the considerations of No to the goal of a much richer Yes. This exhilarating stop sign allows you, and the other party, to assert your needs, interests and positions from what he calls "the balcony"—a place of perspective. Ury's stories of highly consequential solutions he's facilitated make you value the very specific stances and steps that help the snake of No uncoil towards a robustly positive outcome. Defensiveness and attacks become unnecessary; the listener is truly interested, even flexible, once he's secure in his No. Enemies, eventually, can develop respect. Ghandi sent his old adversary Jan Smuts some sandals he made in prison. Smuts returned them, acknowledging, "I am not worthy to stand in the shoes of so great a man."

BIG AS LIFE

Military families get by with Flat Daddy or Mommy, foam cutouts of loved ones overseas (www.flatdaddies.com; nonmilitary versions available at www.partystandups.com).

If aliens from outer space landed on Earth, they might find this anthropological item rather curious. Flat Daddy (or Mommy) is a life-sized, dry-mounted representation of a family member, designed as a reminder, placeholder and vivid ersatz presence of a loved one deployed in Iraq. The armed services provide these dolls to military families for free. Kids and spouses, it seems, find them very comforting. They take Flat Daddy shopping or to bed, push him on a swing and pretend to feed him little snacks. His realistic effigy embodies the magical reality of being in two places at once—one of them a lot safer than the other. Some family members go back and forth, however, vacillating between what the picture is and what so starkly is not. While Flat Daddy can serve as an amulet at times, it also can move the family alon the cardboard road to grief. In another, much lighter realm, people lucky enough not to be at war ca get their own Flat Selves, big as life, to display at special events. As giant declarations, they illumina the stars of the party, making them celebrities for a day.

TREASURE TROVE HAS NEW HOME

Sadye and Company has moved to 121 Hampshire St., Cambridge (617-547-4424).

The closing of Sadye and Company ne MIT? Sad, yes. Happily, it has moved to more simpatico spot, a cozy, right-angle space full of loyal denizens viewing and r viewing its eclectic treasures. A gorgeo baby grand piano in a dreamy green has a 18th-century tableau painted on it. A hu chair, surrounded by open bamboo strip seems fit for a hypnotic guru. One midce tury, blonde wood desk by Heywood Wak field looks ultramodern with jazzy, angula shaped drawers. The sweet decorative pa takes many forms: beautiful old childre books and little girls' dresses; a framed bu terfly-shaped piece crammed with jewel brooches, earrings, gold dogs and watch long, skinny drawers that hold large, to like, chunky letters for an old-fashion press. Antiqueness may take the form the exotic, as in colorful paintings of t sphinx, or in an intimate red-velvet lo seat. Or it may be an ornate silvery c from Argentina with a silvery straw, wi holes to strain out tea leaves, for fancy s ping. You can find the huge horns of son ex-beast connected by leather, or a lar metal flower wall hanging. Jewelry and s ver are also in abundance.

ARTISTRY AT WORK

Chef Jeffrey Fournier delivers a decadent touch to his new restaurant, 51 Lincoln.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

Mark Allen's announcement several months ago that he was closing Le Soir, his well-regarded French restaurant in Newton Highlands, dismayed many lovers of fine dining. Fortunately, Le Soir's space didn't remain empty for long. Jeffrey Fournier, after a successful stewardship at the Metropolitan Club—a chic, sophisticated Chestnut Hill steakhouse—decided the time had come to open his own restaurant. He chose 51 Lincoln St. in Newton Highlands, the address vacated by Le Soir, to launch his enterprise.

Emulating the creative, peripatetic chef Robert Fathman (the Federalist, Trio, Azure, Anthem), Fournier has followed a career path taking him from Massachusetts to the West Coast, and back to Boston for tours of duty with Lydia Shire at Excelsior and Lock-Ober; a brief but creative stint at the now-departed Sophia's in the Fenway; the Metropolitan Club; and now to his own place. Since 51 Lincoln opened early this year, it has played to packed houses during the week as well as on weekends.

Instead of wasting time and energy in the selection of a name—the address works just fine—Fournier applied his talents to putting a personal stamp on the physical setting as well as on the food. His own artwork hangs on the wall. His creative, New American cuisine extracts maximum flavor and optimum texture from good ingredients. And his approach to cooking is refined, with an almost classic discipline that avoids cluttering the plate and confusing the palate with too many disparate ingredients.

Scallop ceviche

A basket of good bread, accompanied by a small bowl of olive oil with softened cloves of roasted garlic, made a positive first impression. The menu started with small appetizers paired with liqueurs, an idea Fournier conceived at Sophia's. Of these ($9 with liqueur, $6 without), the lavender-honey–glazed, rosemary-skewered shrimp had been grilled to crunchy, flavorful perfection. The two good-sized shrimp made a splendid appetizer for one, or delectable tapas tastes for two. A delicate garnish of chopped tomatoes and ultrathin, crisp-fried plantain slices complemented day-boat scallop ceviche, in which two large, succulent sea scallops had been sliced into cylindrical halves, revealing the slightly rosy hue that resulted from the cooking action of lime juice. The engaging interplay of flavors—sweet, nutty, tangy and pleasantly fishy—played on the palate.

Of the regular appetizers, the Chatham mussels yielded a bowl of large, sweet and pristine mussels immersed in lemongrass, garlic, white wine and parsley butter ($12), and crowned with a giant crouton. Shallots and fennel enhanced the broth, making it so good I requested a spoon to consume the last drop. Another appetizer, scallops and bacon "Colombia" with an arepa (cornmeal pancake) and mango butter ($11), replicated a dish Fournier had created at the Metropolitan Club. A far cry from the clichéd bacon strips wrapped around scallops, this dish brought "surf and turf" to a new level: It featured a block of flavorfully fatty smoked pork belly that perfectly complemented the velvety-textured, succulently sweet giant sea scallops.

The pasta selections, the most abbreviated portion of 51 Lincoln's menu, merit special attention. Fresh lobster noodles with butter-poached lobster and champagne sauce come in two sizes: as either a classic pasta course ($18) or a main cours ($27). Made in-house, these irregularl shaped fragments of pasta (often calle straccia, or "rags" in Italian) wore a coatin of buttery sauce derived from juices ren dered by the succulent hunks of lobste tomalley and a splash of champagne. Th ambrosial result lingered on my taste bud while the texture of the pasta, resilient y tender, gave real meaning to the much bandied phrase "al dente." In an unabashe display of self-promotion, 51 Lincoln menu described the rigatoni bolognai ($15 for a small portion, $22 for a large) "chef's famous." Despite my skeptical rea tion to the name, once I tasted this full-fl vored combination of meat, herbs, a touc of tomato and a splash of cream, I con curred that the dish deserved to be famou Not being a fan of tube pastas like rigator penne or ziti, I asked the kitchen to subst tute linguini, which provided a particular effective vehicle for this delicious sauce.

Main courses for the most part sustain the high standards set by the appetizers an pastas. The whimsically named "Shrim shrimp, 'Don't call me scampi'" ($20) i cluded five good-sized grilled shrimp of in peccable texture and lively flavor, accom panied by moist, marvelously light an delicate spinach gnocchi and roasted r maine lettuce. Though the texture of th gnocchi may have been delicate, their ga lic content was not. Being a fan of the pu gent perennial (or the "stinking rose," many a restaurant that features garlic ca it), I delighted in its assertive presence. A other first-rate main course, the pomme mustard free-range organic chicken ($19 had been semiboned, pounded thin an roasted to achieve crisp skin and moist, f vorful flesh, its cooking juice reduction cr ating a sauce that encouraged overindu gence in what remained in our bread bask to mop it up. I could've dispensed with th accompanying johnnycake, a starchy pa cake, but the braised leek, one of my f vorite vegetables, compensated.

The other two main courses I tried at Lincoln showed great promise, but ea was flawed in a different way. The ca iron–seared sirloin steak ($27), a magni cent piece of beef with robust flavor, a rived medium to medium-well rather th medium-rare as ordered. Our waiter, d yed when he saw the only slightly pink erior of my steak, offered to return it to e kitchen and replace it. I thanked him t declined, since the excellent cabernet luction sauce and its garnishes—truffled lenta fries with a zesty Parmesan dip- g sauce and perfectly braised baby car- s with part of their green coiffures still ached—relegated the slightly over- oked steak to the category of a minor appointment.

The other flawed dish, paella with llops, mussels, chorizo and saffron nato rice ($24), had a more fundamen- problem. The scallops, mussels and sage were terrific in both flavor and ture, but the "saffron tomato rice" was balling. Rice in classic paella should be oked with the seafood and meat until, ated in the sauce rendered by these in- dients and infused with the exotic fla- and aroma of saffron, it becomes the den, crusty centerpiece of the dish. e rice in 51 Lincoln's "American paella" med to have been steamed or boiled by elf into a sticky texture and, almost as afterthought, scooped into the bowl in ich the paella was served. I devoured scallops, mussels and sausage with to but passed on the rice. I had as- med the "American" modifier meant re'd be no chicken, a standard ingredi- of paella; how disappointing to tuck o a dish bearing so little resemblance its Spanish namesake.

The restaurant's wine list offered seven ites, seven reds and two sparkling wines by the glass, and four times that many by the bottle, over a broad price range. More than half of the whites and a quarter of the reds sold for $30 or less. The Revello 2005 barbera d'Alba ($25) brought a surprisingly full-bodied red wine with good acidity and fine finish. Louis Latour 2003 Santenay ($35), a well-structured, aromatic pinot noir from the southern tip of the Côte d'Or in Burgundy, proved a terrific companion to the food. Desserts (all $6) included a plate of fresh cookies, hot from the oven, which can be accompanied by a scoop of exquisite ice cream ($2) from Ice Cream Works, a Newton Highlands institution. Key lime pie, though tasty, suffered from tough, undistinguished pastry, while the tiramisu could have used an additional splash of liqueur or coffee to make it more moist.

The restaurant's space, which has housed four different eateries in the last eight years, provides an attractive and comfortable venue. The chef-owner's bright, bold abstract paintings on the walls balance the understated acrylic brush strokes in the plexiglass windows between the dining room and the foyer and hall. A pleasantly appointed, clubby room downstairs can accommodate private parties of up to 20. The visual aesthetic is replicated in the eye-catching presentations of Fournier's dishes. His multifaceted artistry ensures that visitors to 51 Lincoln are in for an enjoyable and satisfying meal. IB

Because "Boston Private" Is a Bank?

Pino Maffeo rewrites the meat map.

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

What's in a name? Ken Oringer's KO Prime is fine, given that Ken's Steakhouse was already taken. But Boston Public? Boston Public… what?? Chef Pino Maffeo's description of his new restaurant, located in the former Restaurant L space, as "a steakhouse concept" doesn't spark an instant thrill—surprising since Maffeo, renowned for his thrillingly inventive cuisine, now co-owns the place.

Maffeo verbally shrugs at his publicist's use of the phrase "modern steakhouse": "I don't know what 'modern' means," he says. "If that means spaceships, it's not us!"

"Us" is Maffeo and partner Nino Trotta, who've revamped the dining venue inside Louis by relocating the bar from the back dining area into the front room to create more of a lounge-style feeling, and repainted in shades of espresso and parchment to make the formerly stark space "more inviting and comfortable," says Maffeo.

Which brings us back to the name. As Boston natives who attended the city's public schools, Maffeo says, he and Trotta wanted "something that represents the city" in its geographic and culinary variety, "where people can pick and choose" what they want to eat. Thus, the menu is printed on old Boston maps and divided into segments such as "Boston Fish Pier" (oysters on ice, lemongrass-cured salmon, fried Ipswich steamers) and "Boston Public Garden" (salads like fried calamari with pickled watermelon). Maffeo's longtime Asian influence is spotlighted under "Boston Chinatown" (crab wontons, steamed mussels with curry broth) and in the most dominant neighborhood: "Boston Meat Market." In addition to roasted Laotian pork ribs and Kobe beef tartare, Maffeo promises to feature up to a dozen different varieties of steak, including "unusual cuts of beef better known in Europe or Mongolia, mostly on the bone—some of it like Barney Rubble and Fred Flintstone, but in a nice way."

Also nice is that Maffeo is applying the "exact same kitchen technique" whose fastidiousness distinguished his cuisine at Restaurant L. "Time-consuming, meticulous insanity," he sighs happily. "Every single tiny molecule is babied."

WINE

Value Pinot Noir

BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.

In wine as in clothing, language and food, fashion exercises a powerful hold over us. If you doubt its influence for a moment, consider the strange case of pinot noir. People who wouldn't have been caught dead buying a bottle three years ago complain bitterly now that their favorite brands have shot way up in price. Clearly the scales have been tipped toward the demand side. Why? The major factor in the wine's surging popularity is undoubtedly Sideways, the award-winning 2004 movie whose main character was notable mainly for whining about everything, including what a complex, subtle, thrilling wine pinot noir makes. Since the moment of the film's release, it seems, there's been no stopping sales momentum.

It so happens that pinot noir has always been among the most intriguing grapes, creating wines whose character and style reflect the grape's unique growing conditions. Pinot's requirements for climate and soil are quite specific; it doesn't grow successfully everywhere, and therefore it will never attain the near-ubiquitous status of chardonnay, merlot or cabernet sauvignon. In fact, it accounts for only 2 to 3 percent of all the wine California produces.

Still, there's something incredibly satisfying about this versatile red wine when it's done right. The fruit and crisp, savory acidity cut through a variety of textures, while minimal tannins mean it will rarely overpower lighter fare. The following list, in ascending order of preference, represents the current favorites in my moderately priced pinot noir blind-tasting sweepstakes. What unites them stylistically is that they avoid the cloying, candied sweetness that so many under-$20 pinot noirs display today.

Crosspoint Pinot Noir, Monterey, 2005 ($15). This previous winner from the North Central Coast is a relatively pale, garnet-colored wine that features layers of cherry, floral and sweet herb aromas. This wine is on the lighter side of the pinot spectrum. It's probably not the first choice for a converted cabernet drinker.

MacMurray Ranch Pinot Noir, Sonoma Coast, 2005 ($16). This wine is primarily Russian River in origin blended with a dash of grapes from Carneros. Impressively pedigreed despite the moderate price, it's pleasantly pale in color, with raspberry and vegetal spice accents, a smooth, round, creamy feel on the palate and gentle, fine-grained earthiness. It's an ideal quaffing pinot noir, while also substantial enough to accompany grilled tuna.

St. Michael Eppan Pinot Nero, Alto Adige, Italy, 2004 ($12). Italian pinot noir is, for the most part, a well-kept secret. Produced by Hans Terzer, one of the Alpine north's most celebrated enologists, this pale, cherry-scented wine shows the cool, leafy, elegant personality of pinot quite clearly. Its acidity is a bit more pronounced than in most of the American wines. Ideal with a variety of lighter fish dishes as well as salads.

Kendall Jackson Vintner's Reserve "Special Select" Pinot Noir, California, 2005 ($18). They make pinot? Yes, and a very fine one. Conclusive proof that big isn't necessarily bad, this lovely, sensual wine has everything: dark cherry, herb, mushroomy, tea-leaf aromas that are complex and heady. It's a blend of fruit primarily from the Central Coast, as well as a bit o Mendocino and Sonoma. Interestingly, it's not pure varietal, with a percentage of syrah blended in seamlessly to ratchet up the spice. A versatil wine that will play up milder dishes while serving as a nice backdrop for more assertive flavors.

Kim Crawford Pinot Noi Marlborough, 2006 ($16). And the winner by a hair: Ne Zealand. Big and mouth-filling this is a true "wow" wine. It doesn't get much better for the price. Insiders are predicting that ultimately pino noir will dominate in terms of both reputation and grape plantings in this country, replacin sauvignon blanc. Rich and creamy wit great masses of fresh cherry–like acidity, it's go all the flavor interest of a wine twice the price In short, it appears to have everything pinot noir fanatics love. Grilled salmon would be a nice pairing. iB

Enter the twisted minds of Quentin Tarantino and Robert Rodriguez to see where they draw their inspiration during the Brattle Theatre's "Welcome to the Grindhouse" series. Showing a slew of exploitation films, the Brattle promises an abundance of blood, guts, nudity and painful clichés—of the like found in the dark duo's recent releases. Books: A Novel Idea

When a group of literary luminaries, including Alice Hoffman, Jodi Picoult, Susan Orlean, Robert Parker and Ann Hood, get together to raise money for a good cause, you can bet your unpublished masterpiece that it'll be an inspirational night. Which is why "An Evening With Your Favorite Authors," at the American Repertory Theater, is any avid reader or writer's go-to event. The authors will read selected passages from their own works, with proceeds benefiting the Hoffman Breast Center of Mount Auburn Hospital. American Repertory Theater, 64 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-847-8300). www.alicehoffman.com/tour.html. 6:30 pm. $250. —LPK

SAT./MAY 19

CityScope: Ah, Push It!

Was your high school prom everything you hoped it would be? You and your hot-tie date were crowned prom king/queen—and partied the night away with the popular crowd? Not quite? Well, now's your chance for a do-over. Vinalia is transforming its ballroom for Boston's first annual Adult Prom, and this event truly has big kids in mind. Highlights include cocktails, a three-course meal, live jazz and the dance spinnings of DJ Spinderella from Salt-N-Pepa. So dress the part once again—down to the tux, boutonniere and corsage—and rewrite those prom memories for the better. Vinalia Ballroom, 101 Arch St., Boston (617-737-1777). www.bostonprom.com. 8 pm-2 am. $150-$250 per couple. —LPK

Music: On the Air

Video killed the radio star? Not here. And certainly not this month, with the Mountain Stage show coming to the Berklee Performance Center for one sweet night. In its 24th year on the air, the live, unedited, two-hour performance draws an impressive roster of musicians. With stops in Boston, Philly and New York this spring, the show's lineup includes Judy Collins, Lori McKenna and Mavis Staples, among others. Much more fun than listening in on National Public Radio. Berklee Performance Center, 136 Mass. Ave., Boston (617-931-2000). 7:30 pm. $35.50-$55. —LPK

Macadamia-crusted arctic char with coconut beurre blanc

Tastings: Go Fish

The idea of enjoying a lobster feast inside an aquarium might seem as kosher as wolfing down a hamburger in a cow pasture, but the New England Aquarium's new Celebrate Seafood Dinner Series—which kicks off May 29—defies that logic. The goal of the three-course meal is to educate Bostonians about ocean friendly seafood—caught or farmed in environmentally responsible ways—and, of course, to treat diners to some tasty fish. The dish of the night is arctic char, and each course is paired with a different wine. Just don't cast any hungry glances at the penguins; they're off-limits. New England Aquarium, Central Wharf, Boston (617-973-5206). www.neaq.org. May 29, 7 pm. $75. —Rich Levine

Spider-Man 3 is cry-worthy—and not in a good way.

BY SEAN BURNS

Sam Raimi's Spider-Man 2 might, or might not, be the greatest superhero movie ever made, but it's definitely the only one that ever made me cry. Lord knows, I've taken a heap of abuse regarding this somewhat pathetic little anecdote over the past three years, but so it goes: Spider-Man 2 caused this writer to weep openly in the theater, in ways I haven't sobbed at a popcorn blockbuster ever since Han Solo found himself frozen in carbonite at the end of The Empire Strikes Back.

Yes, it was really that good, and well worth rewatching every now and again on DVD. With a script credited to (amongst many others) Pulitzer Prize–winning novelist Michael Chabon and Ordinary People scribe Alvin Sargent, Spider-Man 2 forced Tobey Maguire's Peter Parker to confront his personal demons on a deliciously grandiose scale, pitting him against a beloved mentor turned tragically evil, and upped the ante on Peter's flirtation with Miss Mary Jane Watson, personified by Kirsten Dunst as that unattainable girl next door.

Raimi has always wisely viewed this Spider-Man series as a metaphor for puberty, beginning with Peter spending long hours alone in his bedroom, demonstrating unfamiliar bodily strengths and emitting strange, viscous fluids from the darndest of places. In its own weirdly ecstatic pop bubblegum fashion, Spider-Man 2 is about facing up to adulthood, and the struggle to accept who you are, figuratively (or literally) killing your idols and then leaping out the window to shout "Yippee!" while Mary Jane lingers behind, muttering a half-hearted "Go get 'em tiger."

So how did this wonderful series suddenly go so horribly wrong? The received wisdom in Hollywood regarding sequels is that bigger is always better, which might be true if you're making pictures based on Disney theme-park rides, but such massively scaled productions seldom allow for the little notes of humanity that have thus far personified Raimi's Spider-Man series. Boasting no less than three deadly supervillians and a plot so endlessly convoluted I doubt I could get it all down on paper without collapsing from exhaustion, Spider-Man 3 doesn't need a director, it needs a traffic cop.

This is one gigantic movie—according to industry rumors the most expensive ever made. Those dollars are all up on-screen, even when it becomes detrimental to the story, as in an early tussle between Spidey and James Franco's New Goblin, inheriting his dad's (Willem Dafoe's Green Goblin) predilection for flying skateboards and goofy costumes. A throwaway fight grows into a monster of computer-generated effects, lasting the better part of a reel and culminating in Franco's sudden burst of amnesia, a hoary plot device meant only to keep the character sidelined until the inevitable showdown later. See, we have to wait because Thomas Haden Church is suddenly revealed as the real killer of Peter's Uncle Ben, a weird swatch of revisionist history we're supposed to be sold on by a lot of awkwardly reshot scenes from the first Spider-Man flick. James Cromwell calls Peter and Rosemary Harris' Aunt May down to the police station and explains all this for absolutely no discernable reason whatsoever.

Did I mention that Church also fumbled into a molecular research facility during his recent prison escape and now has the superpowers of the Sandman? To his credit, Raimi crafts a mini-tour-de-force of computer animation while this reborn supervillain attempts to assemble himself amidst shifting grains of sand; it's perhaps the only sequence that approaches the poetic qualities of the previous pictures.

But then there's also this alien gob of evil black goo that's mysteriously glommed itself onto our hero, transforming itself into a slick dark costume and forcing Maguire to grow his bangs out like a 1980s New Wave frontman. Spider-Man 3 soon stops dead in its tracks, becoming a comic book copy of The Nutty Professor, as this parasitic alien creature transforms gentle Peter into a rage-filled Buddy Love, culminating in an agonizingly prolonged nightclub musical number that's frankly an embarrassment to all involved.

And I haven't even gotten around to Topher Grace's Eddie Brock, a hotshot photographer with one eye on Peter's Daily Bugle job until he all-too coincidentally happens to be standing beneath a rain of that sinister black goo. Frankly, I've never understood comic fans' blind adoration of the Venom character, as he always seemed more like a triumph of Todd McFarlane's illustrative techniques than any inherent storytelling skill. But still, the sinister smiling guy deserved better than to show up about two hours into this already bloated, overcrowded, overlong spectacle.

Spider-Man 3's scribes, including Raimi, his brother Ivan and Oscar-winner Sargent, eventually find themselves written into such a corner that Peter is left watching a recap of the film's second act on the TV news. Honestly folks, if you need to summarize about an hour's worth of plot by having your hero tune into CNN, then there isn't going to be room for the grace, humor and wit of those two earlier movies. Spider-Man 3 proves that sometimes more is a heckuva lot less. 'Nuff said. iB

SPIDER-MAN 3 ★★

With Tobey Maguire, Kirsten Dunst, James Franco, Thomas Haden Church, Topher Grace, J.K. Simmons and Rosemary Harris. Based on the comic book by Stan Lee and Steve Ditko. Screenplay by Sam Raimi, Ivan Raimi and Alvin Sargent. Directed by Sam Raimi. Now playing at Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

Away From Her ★★★½

You probably wouldn't expect the feature direct debut of 28-year-old actress Sarah Polley to be that explores the quiet cracks of a 44-year man during the slow, horrific fade of a woman succu ing to Alzheimer's. You also probably wouldn' pect it to be this good. Adapted by Polley from Munro's short story "The Bear Went Over Mountain," Away From Her takes place in a ha ing, Bergman-esque landscape of cold, wintery and barely repressed emotions lingering just b the surface. Julie Christie stars as Fiona, disinte ing by the day from this nightmarish disease v her husband Grant (the astounding Gordon sent) is forced to consign his beloved to a nu home. It's a cruel move casting Christie as the a spouse, as her luminous star persona carries so r baggage that, as was the case with Peter O'Too Venus, we in the audience are forced to confron aging of our own movie memories. The needl fractured timeline is a rookie mistake, but othe Polley handles this hefty material with dignity grace. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embas

Black Book ★★★½

Fiendishly entertaining and extremely nau Paul Verhoven's Black Book is a rousing, rip-s ing adventure told in brightly colored, Golden of Hollywood broad strokes. It's a wild, hammy shamelessly melodramatic and quite shamel enjoyable. But just when you're beginning to der if a movie about WWII genocide has any ness being this much fun, the film's wicked b ness leaves an aftertaste. It's impossible to ex all the convoluted hairpin twists and turns send our Jewish torch-singer heroine sprinting the arms of the bumbling Dutch resistance from there on Black Book becomes a breathl paced roller coaster of double and triple cr bedroom secrets and hidden agendas. The thing you can count on is that you're never than five minutes away from either a sex scen machine gun battle, and you're not going to any idealists on-screen. That the film is such a cious, kicky entertainment feels somehow di certing, almost as if such embittered pessi shouldn't be this pleasurable. (At Coolidge C Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Blades of Glory ★½

The same initially semi-amusing joke repeated ad i tum for a mercifully brief 89 minutes, this choppy w be farce pits Will Ferrell's bloated, stupidly macho skater against Jon Heder's dorky, angelic swan of t and then twists the plot backwards into a triple lut ing them to compete in the World Finals as a pai stars throw themselves into various physical comi tortions with reckless abandon, but the gags never beyond that same creepily homophobic Wild Hog tine, wherein we are expected to roar derisively ju cause these two dudes look wicked gay. Heder re his Napoleon Dynamite performance right down hand gestures, and Ferrell does the same blockhea undressed alpha-male routine you already reme from Anchorman and Talledega Nights. First-time makers Josh Gordon and Will Speck shortcut th most of the action in fake-documentary broadca montages, almost as if they didn't have the ene write any honest-to-god scenes. The lone unfamili ment here is a typically gonzo supporting turn fro rested Development's magician-genius Will Arnet Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Disturbia ★★½

Remaking Hitchcock's Rear Window for this cell-phone cameras and broadband Internet ain't such a bad idea, but director DJ Caruso's t bopper spin on the 1954 classic only gets halfway across the street before devolving into serial killer clichés. Shia LeBeouf, not e Jimmy Stewart but extremely charismatic nor less, stars as a juvenile delinquent placed house arrest for the summer, spying on his neig after mean old mom (The Matrix's Carrie-Moss) takes away his Xbox. Grace Kelly ge placed by a topless sunbather who just mov next door (Sarah Roemer), and Thelma Ritter is transformed into that of a Red Bull–and-wh addled Asian sidekick (Aaron Yoo.) Compa the ADD affectations of most younger- sk thrillers, Disturbia's leisurely paced, solidly c first hour is a pleasant, character-driven sut Such a shame the final reels reek of lurid overl David Morse's nefarious neighbor develops su man abilities, and his suburban home beco booby-trapped lair more suited for a Ha Lecter flick. (At Boston Common, Fenway the suburbs.)

y Grim ★★½
y-'90s indie cult-hero Hal Hartley has at last re-erged with a follow up to his 1998 muted epic ry Fool, the off-kilter saga of a garbageman from odside, Queens (James Urbaniak), who became a ld-famous revolutionary poet, thanks to the cor-ve, whiskey and cigarette-addled influence of the character (Thomas Jay Ryan.) In what's un-btedly this summer's strangest sequel, we dis-er that Henry was actually a deep-cover CIA nt, and his terrible unpublished novel just a ed tell-all of countless state secrets. Parker Posey ises her role as Henry's abandoned ex-wife, re-ted by Jeff Goldblum's chattery G-Man to bring boozy old spy in from the cold. As one expects Hartley's hermetic little universe, the action-ie plot is a great big goof, and these globe-trot-characters spend all their time in cramped, in-inct rooms sputtering out elaborately wordy nologues in flat, affectless monotones. Obviously, dblum was born to hang out in Hartley-land, but formally rigorous canted frames and relentless, stop pitter-patter grow tiresome over time. (At dall Square.)

acture ★★½
ctor Gregory Hoblit cut his teeth with superpro-r Stephen Bochco on such landmark series as Hill et Blues, L.A. Law and NYPD Blue. But despite ing the jump to features over a decade ago with agreeably gimmicky thriller Primal Fear, Hoblit's never quite shaken off his small screen sensibili-His latest, Fracture, isn't a half-bad time-killing troom drama, boasting another captivating per-ance by Ryan Gosling, and Sir Anthony Hop-is on hand to do that thing of his where he bugs yes out, speaks in an indeterminate accent and s for the check to clear. But it's tough to shake the ation that this would all play better on cable, ks mainly to Hoblit's perfunctory visuals and e pacing that begs for commercial interruptions. kins' madman schtick was already stale a couple annibal Lecter movies ago, so kudos to Gosling eeping things interesting. Playing a hotshot dis-attorney with a compone drawl and an insinuat-alf-smile, this tremendous young actor has the ess playfulness of a young Sean Penn. (At Boston mon, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Grindhouse ★★
At once way too much and not nearly enough, Robert Rodriguez and Quentin Tarantino's epic ode to retro schlock is like a museum installation of crap culture artifacts. Presented as a 42nd Street double feature, complete with phony coming attractions, missing reels and prescratched prints, Grindhouse is 191 minutes of winking postmodern irony and full-tilt movie-geek onanism. Rodriguez's flick comes first, and it's a splattery, chaotic homage to John Carpenter, chock full of zombies, strippers and some breath-takingly bad acting. Personal mileage may vary, but for this reviewer the joke got old before the one-hour mark. Tarantino's snail-paced entry slips into self-parody with endless foul-mouthed chatter and constant close-ups of women's feet. Nobody seems to have told Kurt Russell that this was all a goof, so America's most underrated actor delivers a fully rounded performance of equal parts pathos and dread as a washed-up stunt driver–turned–serial killer. But Tarantino's dialogue is so uncharacteristically wretched and repetitive, not even a late-game, breathlessly staged car chase can counter the pointlessness of the project, or its juvenile, self-indulgent stench. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Hoax ★★★
With his curly hair and antsy fast-talking pitter-patter, Richard Gere seems to be doing a nifty impression of James Caan in director Lasse Hallstrom's breezy, not-bad romp. Based on the stranger-than-fiction story of failed novelist Clifford Irving and his widely publicized, almost-successful attempt to spin a bogus Howard Hughes autobiography out of whole cloth back in the '70s, The Hoax coasts along on Gere's huckster chutzpah. The plan isn't as outrageous as it might sound, as the reclusive, paranoid Hughes was already so notorious for his bizarre behavior, whatever Irving could invent was bound to pale in comparison with the real deal. There's a lovely supporting turn from Alfred Molina as Gere's sheepish, conscience-stricken research assistant, while Stanley Tucci and Hope Davis work their usual snooty wonders as the suckered publishing executives. William Wheeler's screenplay drifts into a few surreal conceits that the literal-minded Hallstrom can't quite visualize, but otherwise it's a surprisingly nimble little picture, complete with an unexpected alternate angle on the Watergate break-in that left me laughing out loud. (At Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Hot Fuzz ★★★
A cheeky, affectionate British send-up of Hollywood's testosterone-crazed summer action extravaganzas, Hot Fuzz stars cowriter Simon Pegg as a tough-talking, no-nonsense supercop transferred to the sleepy country town of Sandford. Much like these same filmmakers' Shaun of the Dead, Hot Fuzz is a movie made by and for people who've seen way too many movies. The humor lies not in the actual gags, but in the way the flick mimics every stale action-movie trope of the past 15 years, transposing big-gun macho moviemaking techniques from countless urban adventures to a quaint little rural village. It's best viewed as a collection of inside jokes, and buffs can spend hours afterwards pouring over all the little winks, nods and references. Director Edgar Wright has really done his homework here, using just the right syncopated crash-cuts, bombastic hero-worship camera angles and comically overblown explosions. After seeing Hot Fuzz, I doubt it'll be possible to keep a straight face during a Michael Bay movie again, assuming one could ever do so in the first place. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Lives of Others ★★★½
Turns out East Berlin wasn't such a nice place to live in 1984, a year presumably chosen with a wink and a smile by first-time writer-director Florian Henckel Von Donnersmark as the setting for this eerily quiet, breathtakingly suspenseful yarn. Ulrich Muhe delivers a performance of brilliant restraint and control as a ruthless Stasi true believer, suddenly discovering glimmers of a long-dormant conscience when assigned to shadow a fundamentally decent playwright (Powers Boothe look-alike Sebastian Koch) who just might be aiding and abetting some subversive pals during those dark days before the wall came crumbling down. Reminiscent of Francis Ford Coppola's The Conversation, The Lives of Others is all clammy paranoia and creeping dread, with Muhe's poker-faced turn somehow giving you everything and nothing at the same time. It's riveting stuff, watching a man discover just how badly his ideals have been twisted and perverted by power-mongering thugs in high places; enough to carry you through this otherwise crisp, understated picture's weird determination to offer more false endings than The Return of the King. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

The Namesake ★★
Movies aren't novels, an inconvenient truth that apparently escaped gifted Mira Nair, who directed this well-intentioned, borderline interminable adaptation of Jhumpa Lahiri's bestseller. Forced to winnow down a dense, unwieldy 30 years' worth of trials and tribulations faced by a family of Bengali immigrants, Nair opts for the greatest hits approach—summarizing several lifetimes in rapid-fire shorthand. Kal Penn, of Harold and Kumar Go to White Castle fame, stars as the stubborn, ungrateful son, rediscovering his cultural heritage only during his darkest moments of adversity. Drifting almost aimlessly through the decades, Nair's stumblebum reworking not only transplants Lahiri's story from Boston to Manhattan, but also feels more like a rushed collection of half-realized scenes, with her typical keenly observed behavioral details clanging against all sorts of hasty exposition and time-lapse dissolves. Books can afford to linger, ramble and digress, but the best films by and large tend to exist on short clocks and clear objectives, concepts anathema to The Namesake's pig-pile of haphazard incident and epic sprawl. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Next ★½
I guess it's been a month or two since we last suffered through a dopey Nicolas Cage action movie, and so along comes this cheerful bundle of nonsense, which features the increasingly bizarre-looking actor as a cheesy Vegas lounge magician who's able to see the future. But only two minutes into the future, which won't get you very far in the Psychic Friends Network. Mangled beyond any point of recognition from Philip K. Dick's story "The Golden Man," the hooey here gets rolling once Julianne Moore's tough-talking, black leather-clad FBI agent decides to focus all the Bureau's resources on coercing Cage into helping track down a missing nuclear warhead. Jack Bauer, he's not. But the miscast Moore's hard-boiled Joe Friday performance is an unintentional scream, as if she just wandered in from Hot Fuzz somewhere down the multiplex hall. What's creepier is our hero's clairvoyant connection with costar Jessica Biel, nearly 20 years Cage's junior, yet still pressed into duty as the fading superstar's dewy-eyed love interest. Ick. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Perfect Stranger ★

As if Catwoman wasn't already embarrassing enough, Halle Berry continues her sad post-Oscar slide into Sharon Stone territory with this tawdry, not-nearly-sleazy-enough "erotic" thriller that wouldn't even pass muster by Skinemax After Dark standards. Starring as a horny, hard-boiled news reporter (cough), Berry goes undercover at a slick ad agency, attempting to seduce a confession out of a maybe-murderer played by a lost-looking Bruce Willis. Alas, all their flirtations take place online, and director James Foley isn't the first to get gummed up trying to find a cinematic equivalent for cybersex. Foley's a strange case, having directed both David Mamet's Glengarry Glen Ross and Madonna's Who's That Girl. This one bears more resemblance to the latter film, and the peals of raucous laughter that greeted my screening suggest maybe there's a joke somewhere that I just might be missing. Giovanni Ribisi plays an insinuating sidekick who might as well be nicknamed "red herring," and the whole of Perfect Stranger seems like a backdated Internet update to Jagged Edge, which wasn't very good in the first place. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Reaping ★½

Movie studios have spent the better part of a decade unable to find the right kind of showcase for Hilary Swank's offbeat tomboy magnetism, so I guess whoever decided to cast her as a preacher losing faith after a massacre in the Sudan at least deserves credit for thinking outside the box. The latest craven attempt by Hollywood to cozy up to the religious right, The Reaping finds Swank's newly godless university professor making the mistake of seeking a scientific explanation for some plagues of Egypt that just randomly started ravaging a small Louisiana town. Frogs fall from the sky and the rivers run red with blood, but long before the locusts arrive we must first suffer a complicated backstory full of hokum and hooey, one that seems to have been carefully vetted in order to give offense to nobody except logicians. Director Stephen Hopkins conjures a couple of striking images, but the movie is a mess of talky nonsense and fake scares. For her part, Swank remains nearly as unconvincing as the computer-generated mad cows. (In the suburbs.)

Shooter ★★

The Artist Formerly Known As Marky Mark breezes his way through this dopey, paranoid slog, making what should've been an unbearable First Blood knockoff a good deal easier to endure. Based on the first in a series of airport bestsellers by Pulitzer Prize–winning Washington Post film critic Stephen Hunter, Shooter follows Mark Wahlberg's retired supersniper Bob Lee Swagger (dig that name!) as he's played for a patsy in an assassination attempt on the president. Dorchester's favorite son uses a formidable amount of offhand, every-guy charisma to offset the sheer ludicrousness of the scenario. Exacting swift and brutal revenge on the sinister Halliburton-esque cabal led by Ned Beatty's positively Cheney slimeball senator, Wahlberg deliberately and deftly underplays this screenplay's countless goofy flourishes. Director Antoine Fuqua shoots everything in mashed-perspective, telephoto lens closeups that, for a movie about a long-range marksman, is either rank incompetence or willful perversity. Boston Legal's Rhona Mitra costars as an FBI agent who takes every urgent phone call in skimpy underwear. Yes, it's that kind of movie. (At Fresh Pond and in the suburbs.)

An empty-headed spectacle that leaves a loathsome aftertaste, director Zack Snyder's blockbuster adaptation of the Frank Miller comic book reimagines the Battle of Thermopalaye as a monotonous homoerotic videogame. Gerard Butler hollers himself hoarse as King Leonidas, leading 300 Spartans into an impossible battle with something like a billion Persians, here seen astride mutant elephants at the behest of Rodrigo Santoro's nine-foot-tall Xerxes, who apparently labors under the delusion that he's playing RuPaul. Shot entirely in front of a green screen, with tacky, mocha-colored digital vistas and computer-generated extras added in after the fact, 300 certainly doesn't look like any movie you've seen before. In fact, it doesn't look like a movie at all, but rather a chintzy ad for some mysteriously swarthy, musky product you probably don't want to buy. 300's over-the-top bombast quickly becomes droning, and there's no weight or resonance to Snyder's pixilated imagery. It's just an endless barrage of outlandish violence and campy hyper-masculine posing, pandering to the darkest fantasies of maladjusted prepubescent boys. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Vacancy ★★★

Swift, efficient and extremely well-made, director Nimrod Antal's bracingly bare-bones B-movie throwback takes about an hour and 20 minutes to accomplish everything Grindhouse couldn't do in three. Luke Wilson and Kate Beckinsale star as a bickering soon-to-be-divorced duo, lost somewhere way off the interstate, making the tragic mistake of stopping for the night at a fleabag roach motel run by that expertly jittery character actor Frank Whaley. Our unhappy couple quickly discovers that their honeymoon suite has been outfitted with hidden cameras, and that the stack of VHS tapes on the dresser features footage of all the earlier guests being tortured to death. Antal, who previously helmed the 2003 Hungarian subway flick Kontroll, has no taste for splattery gore, instead creating jump-out-of-your-seat jolts and occasionally unbearable suspense sequences using nothing but good, old-fashioned camera placement, sound-design and careful editing. This is called craftsmanship, boys and girls, and it's something that has been sorely missing from a lot of recent genre pieces. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

John Butler enjoys superstar status at home in Australia, where he became the first indie artist to top the charts, racking up multi-platinum CD sales and several ARIA Awards, the Aussie equivalent of the Grammys. But he's still a cult figure in America, where his trio's funky jam-roots rock comes off as a cross between Dave Matthews and Ben Harper.

"We wouldn't be able to afford to tour overseas unless we had my career in Australia," says the singer-guitarist, whose sociopolitical commitments—particularly on the environmental front—stand out more than his virtuosic if unoriginal musical style. And that makes the John Butler Trio the perfect choice to join Guster, KT Tunstall, Mat Kearney, Grace Potter & the Nocturnals and Vega 4 for the free WBOS EarthFest concert at the Hatch Shell May 26.

Do-gooder the John Butler Trio has made a name for itself Down Under Like Boston-bred headliners Guster, the JBT offsets its carbon-dioxide emissions on tour through the purchase of credits for wind energy and uses bio-diesel fuel for its buses. Butler also favors organic cotton for merchandise, as well as recycled paper and soy-based inks for CD packaging.

"And Shannon [Birchall], our bass player, is saying that we've turned down all our amps 20 percent to use less electricity," Butler adds with a laugh via cell phone from South Carolina. "In the early days of the band, we couldn't afford to print on recycled paper. But we always had the intention that if we sold enough CDs and did the right thing with our careers, one day we would do that."

Butler certainly came to his music career in a roundabout way. At age 11, he moved from California to a small town in western Australia, his father's homeland. "I found my own things to do: art, skateboarding and camping," says Butler, who also learned to play guitar but attended art college, where he painted in an unorthodox mix of oils and acrylics. "At the same time, I was experimenting with my guitar and tunings and got really hooked on the whole open-tuning thing. And that's where I found my voice.

"Then I started busking, and it kind of grew from there," the 32-year-old continues. His trio, rounded out by percussionist Michael Barker, is also slated to play the Sydney portion of Al Gore's global Live Earth concert July 7, then will return to these parts to support the Allman Brothers Band at the Newport Folk Festival Aug. 4.

As a youth Butler inherited his grandfather's 1930s-era dobro, and today he runs an acoustic arsenal—including six- and 12-string guitars, a banjo, a ukelele, a Weisenborn and a National lapsteel—through a Marshall amp with distortion and volume pedals that allow him to conjure electric-sounding solos.

On the trio's new CD Grand National, which refers not to the guitar brand but to "one grand nation," he also hits more lyrical extremes, from somewhat cloying love songs (including one to his wife, "Daniella") to pointed political numbers like the post–Hurricane Katrina "Gov Did Nothing," the propaganda indictment "Used to Get High" and "Devil Running," about fear-mongering in the wake of Sept. 11.

"Sometimes you have to say it how it is," he explains. "And I think 'Gov Did Nothing' and 'Used to Get High' and 'Devil Running' still have a poetry about them. It's just not a mystery what I'm talking about."

Butler coproduced Grand National, the studio follow-up to the JBT's 2003 breakthrough Sunrise Over Sea, with Mario Caldato Jr., who's worked with the Beastie Boys and Beck and lent his knowledge of hip-hop and reggae beats.

"I'm influenced by a lot of that stuff," says Butler, who names the Beastie Boys after Jimi Hendrix and Bob Marley on his list of musical heroes. "There are a lot of feels on the album, and [Caldato] brought a great sound to them and had good suggestions and a relaxed vibe. The most important thing is [that] he just brought an atmosphere for being creative."

Creativity is truly prized by Butler, who says he's put as much as $200,000 into the three-year-old JB Seed Arts Grant Programme to fund emerging Australian artists. "At the start, it was 95 percent my money, but there's [been] more donating, and now it's 40 to 50 percent my money," says the former street performer. "We just want to be a helping hand to other great music in our country. We've been supported by our music industry and received a lot of grants, so now that we're more financially well-off, we thought we'd give back to the other artists and help bring more art to the forefront." iB

Sugar, Sugar

To my sweet Almond Joy: You were dressed crisp, cool and nice with colors that were natural yet bold and bright. You have an aroma of sweet cocoa and a shapely and firm body. When I hold you tenderly, I anticipate mouth-watering ecstasy and waves of fruity nuts tickling my senses. As I think of you, temperance modulates the intensity of my anticipation, and I know that seeing you will exceed my expectations once again. The smooth essence of your chocolate-covered coconut, accented with your almond joy, brings me sweet delight. Sometimes I feel like a nut!

—From Your Hot Cappuccino

It's So Easy to Fall in Love

Where do I begin? It's hard to put into words, but I'll try. You mean everything to me. I'm not sure how I lived without you before. I'm the luckiest person in the world to have found you, or to have you find me. This is what it's like—to have a life-long love, and to know that no matter what happens, we have each other. Your loyalty to those you love, your kindness, creativity, unique approach to life—and ability to read others—constantly amazes me. It's so easy to love and adore you. Your wisdom, your smile, your touch elevates me to no end. I know we can do anything we dream of. The sky is the limit; let's get started.

—Your One and Only

It's Not Over, Until It's Over

I miss you terribly but that witch Sarah is doing her best to keep us apart. I don't know whether to kiss you or slam the door in your face when you eventually show up at my door again. I'm angry at you because you let that crazy woman back into your life, and now she's hijacked your e-mail account (and e-mailed me to tell me about it) and become a stalker. I'm angry at you because your secrecy and duplicity when we first met is now making communication difficult. I'm angry at you because you seem to have given up—did you really think I'd just dump you without a good-bye? Maybe I should've because I'm beginning to think the "cute but dumb" tag that you're trying to escape is true. And I'm angry because I still give a damn instead of just walking away and leaving you with that crazy witch! Damn you! Now e-mail me.

Baby Steps

I'm writing you this letter and don't recognize myself. I don't usually make the first step, but everything is different today. I want to make the first step this time and get acquainted with you, because I've never met such an interesting person like you. You attract me with your beauty and your firm character. How would I know about your beauty and character? It's very simple. I believe that my heart tells me the truth. If your heart begins beating faster after reading my letter, don't be slow to write me a letter at http://thanx tolove.com/hoping. I'm really looking forward to getting a note from you.

Here and Gone

To My Stressed-Out Sweetheart: I know finals have got you down and out. Between studying chemistry, theology, anatomy and art history, you've been a little on-edge lately. Not to mention your roomies for next year ditched you and ran off to get their own place. Forget about it. In a week you'll be relaxing on the beach and I'll be right beside you. It's been that way for almost a year, and it'll be that way for many to come! Happy anniversary, and don't forget to call if you need help studying for anatomy.

—Your Wiggles

Mystery Man

I went out to celebrate the last day of classes at Tonic, and in a sea of B.U. kids, I spotted you. You're a tall, built guy with a light-colored hat and khaki shorts, standing by the DJ booth downstairs. Alas, the night was almost over and I was too nervous to approach you. When the bar closed, I once again saw you with friends outside. My friend and I walked over, but you were gettir into a cab. The other boys said played football at B.C. Well, I h you keep going to Tonic on Thursdays, so I can spot you ag I promise that I'll approach you next time!

rockie horoscope

MAY 16 – 29, 2007

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Gather ye roses while ye may." May being the operative word—and the optimum time accumulate gifts and line up favors, especially around the Taurus new moon May 16. your April birthday was a disappointment, feel free to use this new moon to make a ore detailed, up-to-date birthday wish. And don't neglect the cupcake and candle at'll complete the ritual. Artists may be offered a chance to participate in a loosely fined project that isn't the typical commission and isn't about the same old subject.

GEMINI

AY 21–JUNE 20

aster than a speeding bullet." That's how your Mercury ler zips through your sign this month, but by Memorial Day e transit will be history. So make every day you have access a double shot of smarts count for something. Plan on leashing your proposal to save the world with words the ekend of May 19. Enthusiastic Jupiter helps with the omotion, Uranus provides that crucial eureka moment and alistic Saturn makes it sound as if it'll succeed. Backup pears once the sun enters Gemini May 21.

CANCER

UNE 21–JULY 22

ery new moon highlights another area of activity on the oon Child's chart. While the Aries new moon in April may ve focused on career and family matters, the Taurus new oon on May 16 emphasizes relations with colleagues and oups with whom you share a common interest. For the xt four weeks, these are the people who'll take up a good al of your thoughts. At the same time, militant Mars is ossing your Aries midheaven for the first time in two ars. Prepare to roll up your sleeves, possibly to put up ur dukes. It's not smooth sailing.

LEO

JLY 23–AUGUST 22

ore time and energy devoted to maintaining your good me: That's the message the Taurus moon conveys when it eets up with your sun ruler at the top of your solar chart. is is why you'll take pains to make a favorable impression th the people you run into, clients and casual quaintances alike, during the new four-week lunar cycle. en a relative you haven't kept track of could figure into this enario. How other people's money fits in is a bit of a stery, but as Mars digs deeper into exploratory Aries, the ason will be revealed.

VIRGO

UGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

convergence of planets at the crown point of your solar art suggests that now is a good time to take your latest reer decision even more seriously. Direct your considerable ergy and intelligence toward achieving what could be the ost adventurous project you've undertaken in a long while. it if you're content to let matters progress at their own eed without additional effort on your part, make sure your formation is up-to-date. Your Mercury ruler leaves multi-ceted, well-connected Gemini on Memorial Day.

LIBRA

EPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

cial politics becomes an important element of your success ienever your Venus ruler transits your Cancer midheaven it does throughout May. Although a Libra is rarely rude, w is definitely not the time to try to muscle your way to e top. Gracious good manners, kindly consideration—the alities your sign is known for— combine to convince the ople who count that you're the person who best meets the allenge. Domestic goddesses get to show what an pressive job they can do even if they're far from home.

SCORPIO

CTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

new moon in your Taurus house of significant others gnals the beginning of something special with a partner. though this is an annual event, you shouldn't take the omise of a fresh approach or a fresh face for granted. If you happen to be involved in a dispute, then the new lunar cycle could raise the wattage on an issue that should probably be settled sooner rather than later. Later would be late June, when your feisty Mars coruler gets to bull-headed Taurus, a sign as stubborn as your own.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

The closer we get to solar Gemini, the more flexible Archers become. Is it because the heat of the sun loosens the joints or because you can see more clearly what's going on with partnership arrangements? Until then, make sure that Mercury keeps you abreast of what's happening with your mate, the deal you're considering and the agent or attorney handling it. You're approaching something of a time bind: Since Mercury turns retrograde in your Cancer house of joint money matters June 15, you can't wait too long to work out the details.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

A dash of cooperation, a pinch of pleasure; it shouldn't take much more than that to compensate for the acidity Mars adds to the mix once it enters your Aries home base May 15. Keep drawing on the harmonious vibe Venus in your Cancer marriage house offers; as long as the goddess is there, interaction with significant others can still go smoothly. And take advantage of the Taurus new moon in your house of romance and recreation to start a new routine you and a loved one can enjoy together (e.g., go for a bike ride).

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

The tricky situation you find yourself in leaves lots of room for an imaginative solution. Having visionary Neptune in your sign allows you to create a number of illusions (e.g., a makeover) short of actually making yourself disappear. But if you need a plausible excuse that'll help deflect some of the pressure the family is under, wait for the new moon in your Taurus home base to show another way. This is also a good time to fix up the house or, since we're in earthy and productive Taurus, to work in the garden.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Only once every two years does macho Mars pass through your Aries house of income and assets. So if you need to get tough about a money matter, this would be the time to do it. However, considering that the Martian approach to a problem is to rant and rave, huff and puff, and otherwise threaten to be nasty, think twice before you adopt such tactics. Gentle persuasion is so much more the Fish's cup of tea. Luckily, the Taurus new moon taking place in your house of communication and salesmanship can point to another strategy.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

"Timing is everything" isn't always true, but this week it may sure seem that way. Having your assertive Mars ruler in Aries for the first time in two years will beef up your desire to "just do it." Besides, the Taurus new moon June 16 might present an opportunity to launch a project with a solid financial future—one you've been thinking about for a while. Mars occupies your Aries house of self-interest and self-expression until June 24; after that (through Aug. 6), the fiery motivator gets you to concentrate almost exclusively on money matters.

THE BLACK ROSE 160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286. www.irishconnec tion.com. Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall-Quincy market area of Boston and is known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef and of course, Mother Sweeney's corned beef, a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself. For thirty years, The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftains, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

THE PURPLE SHAMROCK 1 Union Street, Boston, 617-227-2060. www. irishconnection. com. Located on the freedom trail across from Boston City Hall on Union Street. The Purple Shamrock is the perfect place to stop by and have a bite to eat. TOO BAD IMELDA MARCOS COULDN'T MAKE IT...

Who knew that buying shoes could be an act of civic-mindedness?

Apparently, the Institute of Contemporary Art, which hosted a cocktail reception–cum–shopping spree at the Gucci store in Copley Place. The yummy mummys and pre-facelift socialites got first crack at the Spring/Summer 2007 collection, with a percentage of the sales going to the museum to ameliorate any guilt the guests might have felt.

Among those on hand: cochairs Maggie Gold-Seelig, Nikki Nudelman and Lori Sidman (eight months pregnant but still looking chic in needle-thin heels), her perfectly lovely mother, Gloria Kessler (visiting from NY), the supersparkly Jessica Gifford Busch, redheaded thoroughbred Suki Forbes Bingham, bubbly brunette fashion plate Allison Gordon with her adorable daughter, Gussie, PR princess Wendy Pierce, the staggeringly beautiful Laura Zecca, hairdeity Mario Russo, interior designer Suzanne Logan, the supremely stylish Karen Rotenberg, trendsetter Gilbert Hickman, Beacon Hill glamazon Allison Fischoeder, party pair Andrew and Olga Rogal, and so on and so forth, most of whom sipped wine, socialized and slipped into the latest in chi-chi footwear, all in the name of contemporary art.

"It's not Gucci; it's Jimmy Choo, but let's keep that between you and me," said one woman after being complimented on her purse.

Then there was the guest who said to a friend, "I love that jacket. What kind of fur is it?" to which the woman responded, "Pony, but don't tell my children. They'd hate me for it."

Meanwhile, as several women worried how their husbands would react to their purchases, there was one lucky lady who tried on a bracelet, and when she tried to take it off, her husband said, "Too late. I already bought it for you."

LICENSE TO THRILL...

What do Pussy Galore and Boston Ballet have in common?

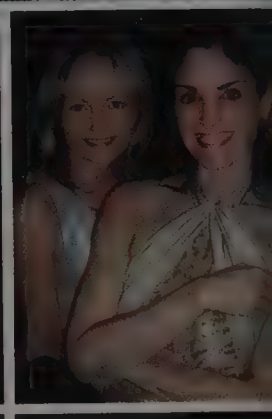
James Bond—the theme of this year's gala, For Your Eyes Only, which took place at the Cyclorama.

Even Ernst Blofeld would have been impressed with the black-tie affair. Guests were greeted by a vintage Aston Martin out front, and then enjoyed a cocktail reception where at least one guest ordered a martini "shaken, not stirred." The party continued with a lavish dinner, an even more lavish live auction and dancing into the wee hours.

Just about everyone who's anyone was there, among them: the evening's cochairs, Lisa Pierpont, Angela Koutoulakis and Ruth Littlechild, balletomanes John and Pamela Humphrey and Marjie and Bob Kargman, real-life James Bond Bill Poduska and the always-scintillating Susan, the soignée Diana Rockefeller (proving beyond a shadow of a doubt that diamonds really are forever), gorgeous blonde art collector Beth Johnson, gorgeous blonde real estate broker Beth Dickerson, gorgeous blonde fashion plate Kristina Lyons, the perfectly charming Charles and Patty Ribakoff, the statuesque Jennifer Donaldson, incorrigible imp Sam Pierpont and his wife, Renee (whom he insisted on calling "Ivana Humpalot"), the effervescent and always elegant Carla Cabot, über-philanthropists Ted and Joan Cutler, perpetual cut-up Dan Waintrup and the lovely Linda, Channel 5 heartthrob Anthony Everett with his stunning spouse, Lydia, swanlike socialite Trevania Dudley Henderson and the ever-affable John, and bright young things from Brookline Andy Bernstein and Jackie Shoback, to name a mere handful.

The room was decorated to a fare-thee-well, while everyone's faces were bathed in purple light that was surprisingly flattering. The entrées, meanwhile, were served beneath see-through domes and accompanied by a pair of espionage-appropriate sunglasses, and by the time people started sneaking out to the after-party, everyone had worked up a lather on the dance floor.

Among the evening's most amusing remarks:



One man, when asked what his shirt studs were, answered, "Duh! Argentine soccer clubs!"

Then there was the woman who was approached to buy a raffle ticket, the prize being a six-night stay at the new Wynn hotel in Sin City.

"I just got back from Las Vegas this morning," she said. "Do I have to go again?" IB

AUTOMOTIVE GROUP

The Kelly Automotive Group Offers Answers to the Frequently Pondered Questions of Car Buyers.

In a time when the World Wide Web offers an array of endless automotive data, there are still fundamental questions consumers struggle with every ay. So, Brian Kelly, President of he Kelly Automotive Group has roduced a series of videos that nswer some of these questions, in a detailed, yet easy to understand manner, without a business agenda.

ere are four such videos...

- Lease Or Buy
- Best Way To Finance
- How To Read A Car Ad
- How To Choose A Dealer

At first glance, it would be logical to assume these videos are elongated Kelly commercials, but refreshingly they are not. "I am asked these questions everywhere I go," Brian Kelly explains. "It's time the public has a professional and inside explanation."

At present, two of the videos are set at kellyauto.com for your review. The other two will be there sometime in July.

"It's All About Saving You Time, And Saving You Money"

THE GOOD LIFE

Brothers and Bostonians Bert and John Jacobs have made a hugely successful business—not to mention a way of life—out of a simple phrase: Life is good. With their fun-loving attitude (see their interview with Jonathan Soroff), the two Jacobs are the best cover models we could imagine for this issue, dedicated to summer's most laid-back pursuits.

If you ask us, these next three months are all about being outdoors whenever possible, dressing comfortably, eating and drinking casually. Now's your chance to grab a picnic blanket and head to an outdoor concert, take up surfing (this is the perfect place to learn), fire up the grill and chill some tasty wine. And don't forget to dress the part: Put aside that business suit in favor of flip-flops and a bathing suit. We're asking you to take very seriously the task of kicking back. There's nothing more important on this season's to-do list.

BLOWING IN THE WIND

Your dating issue (May 16) gives various tips on how to get your date to stay the night. You then conclude with this priceless advice: "Don't fake it. Above all, be yourself." In other words, after telling would-be lovers how to appropriately modify their ways in order to land their quarry, you then caution against any contrived or false behavior, contradicting everything you recommend. The question I'm left wondering is, are the editors of the IMPROPER so obtuse that they don't realize they're talking out of both sides of their mouth? Or is it that they're so swept up in the giddy thrill of romance, sex, the single life and putting out a high-tone, money-making, glossy magazine, they know that what they have to say is worthless, and that their readers know it as well, but it just doesn't matter? This is just another demonstration of why each issue of the magazine is nothing more than a lightweight piece of fluff, destined to be blown away by the next shift in the breeze.

ADMIT ONE

I must confess: When the latest edition of the IMPROPER hits the streets, I grab my copy in Newton Centre, take it home and thoroughly enjoy reading it every time. I relax, look at the pictures of the beautiful people in the city and then kill myself laughing at Ezra's column. However, I laughed louder than ever at his May 2 column, "Rejected!" I've worked in the admissions office at one of the schools he mentions for almost 22 years, so his column really hit home. Thanks.

NEW IN TOWN

Joie de Vivre

"Whoa!" "Oh my God!" "This is huge!" The exclamations keep flowing as patron after patron enters Tremont Street's newest hot spot. Talk about living up to the hype. It's been nearly three years in the making, but the Beehive has arrived. Opening night, some 300 locals pack the place, swilling champagne as if attending their own perfectly planned weddings. Antique chandeliers and ruffled drapes decorate the venue, a sprawling 7,000-square-foot space. Besides the bubbly, artisanal wines, draft beers and classic cocktails circulate on trays. Trendy food flies from the kitchen as the band plays jazz favorites.

A one-stop shop located in the Boston Center for the Arts, the Beehive fills a longtime need for music in the South End. It's "a mature adult place to hang," explains Darryl Settles, who conceived the idea for the bistro/bar/cabaret. Settles teamed with Pho Republique's Jack Bardy, and husband-and-wife Bill Keravuori and Jennifer Epstein, who had experience working with the BCA. The Beehive is their collective vision, geared toward a cultured crowd. The inspiration for the neighborhood joint, both in name and spirit, is an artists' hangout in 1920s Paris. "We're not trying to be Avalon on Lansdowne Street," Epstein adds.

The décor immediately makes this clear. Eclectic artwork, weathered wooden tables and colorful glassware create a bohemian, flea-market feel. The menu tells a similar story. "Gypsy food," according to chef Adam Halberg, formerly of Via Matta. Translation: casual fare with American, European and Mediterranean influences, embodied by a crispy asparagus, lemon and feta appetizer ($10). Other examples include a charcuterie plate ($24) featuring smoky sausages and pappardelle with wild mushrooms and creamy ricotta ($18).

The music's the thing, though. Nightly, it runs the gamut from jazz to R&B to Latin to burlesque. Faculty, students and alumni from Berklee College of Music and the New England Conservatory turn up regularly. And the bistro tables near the stage can be moved to clear space for either dancing or a national act. It's also cool to keep it in the background, focusing instead on the cocktails and conversation. There's a reason the Beehive has two bars (not to mention a 100-seat patio slated to open this summer). "The world would be a better place if every night started with a glass of champagne," Keravuori says. We'll toast to that. The Beehive, 541 Tremont St., Boston (617-423-0069). —Megan Lisagor

After graduating from Harvard, Michael Roiff, forme Hasty Pudding actor and Boston native, packed his bag for Tinsel Town. Producer of the recent Sundance Film Festival hit Waitress, starring Keri Russell, the Eas Coaster seems to fit right in. The son of Paul Roiff, who owns several of Beantown's favorite spots, including XV Beacon, the Federalist, Mistral and Sorrellina, he sti comes home for the food.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: What drew you to Waitress?

Michael Roiff: I was looking for a script and was readin hundreds of them that weren't so great. When I rea Waitress, I liked it immediately. It was exceptionally we written. I met with the writer, Adrienne Shelly, the nex morning, who happened to be in town.

IB: The story follows an unhappily married woman strug gling to turn her life around. How did you connect with as a guy?

MR: It speaks to everyone, I think. We've actually see male audiences really respond to it. Rather than just bein a chick flick, it appeals to everyone. It's edgy and smart.

IB: How did you pick the cast?

MR: We created a list of choices for the lead part. Whe we met with Keri Russell, we knew she was perfect. She beautiful, fun and has emotional depth and range. I thin this will be the part where people get to really see that i her. The rest of the cast just fell into place in differen ways. It's the perfect cast, though. This is my fantasy tean IB: Speaking of fantasy teams, are you a Red Sox fan?

MR: Yes, a big fan. I miss listening to Boston sports radi There's something about that accent saying, "This going to be the worst summah evah because of the Sox which I don't get here.

IB: How difficult was it to transition to Hollywood?

MR: It was hard. Anyone can come to L.A. and do this, bu they might not find a lot of help or support. People aren't a ways so welcoming in this industry. What's exciting, thoug is everyone does have a shot.

IB: What was it like to take Sundance by storm?

MR: It was overwhelming. I still can't believe it. Keep in mind, I'm a Red Sox fan. I spent most of my life believing in something [only] to then have the rug pulled out from underneath me.

L'Espalier on L'Move… Scoring a reservation at one of Boston's best restaurants may get a lot easier in summer 2008. L'Espalier, the first-class French eatery on Gloucester Street in the Back Bay, recently announced its coming move into a larger space on Boylston. The restaurant will occupy 5,500-square-foot digs at the Mandarin Oriental Boston Hotel, slated to open next year. Sister restaurant Sel de la Terre will also open a 7,500-square-foot spot directly next door. It'll be SDLT's third location; its second is headed to Natick this fall. www.lespalier.com; www.seldelaterre.com.

L'Espalier's butter-poached lobster

Trendspotting… From the owners of the Chinatown dim sum joint Hei La Moon comes New Trend Eatery, the latest Asian addition to the Allston Village dining scene. The Cantonese seafood spot offers an extensive menu (available for dining in and taking out) with a variety of traditional and modern dishes, including adventurous options like squid and frog. And with entrées that top off below the $20 mark, it's priced right for the area's starving students. 103 Brighton Ave., Allston (617-254-8811).

The Melting Pot's fondue

Melt in Your Mouth… Break out the Lactaid. It's time for some serious cheese. The Melting Pot, popular purveyor of all things fondue, is coming to downtown Boston this fall (its third Massachusetts location). In addition to the traditional cheddar and swiss, the restaurant offers bouillons for dipping meat and fish, including lobster tail and ahi tuna. Or you could skip the protein and head straight for the chocolate course, complete with strawberries for dunking. The entire experience is more marathon than sprint, with prices ranging from $18 to $64. Loosen your belt buckles. www.meltingpot.com.

Grab Your Aprons… Chef Barbara Lynch already has a major presence in the South End with two successful restaurants (B&G Oysters and the Butcher Shop) and a locally grown market (Plum Produce)—all within a block's distance of each other near the corner of Waltham and Tremont streets. Now Lynch is adding to her empire with a new venture, Stir. But instead of feeding the culinary crowd here, she'll be showing them how to better feed themselves. Stir will offer weekly wine and biweekly cooking classes, taught through demonstrations. It'll also contain a cookbook library. The spot, located next to Plum Produce, is expected to open by late June/early July. www.no9park.com.

FASH FLASH

I See London, I See France

Despite this shop's generic name, its designs are anything but. European Fashion Boutique, which opened May 17, showcases an array of linens, cottons, satins and knits that are shirred, ruffled, flounced, topstitched, sequined and sparkled. With all that design detail, the palette is mostly muted, though a few bright and flirty prints pop up. Prices range from $120 for a summer shirt to $1,000 for a winter coat, with dresses falling in the middle. Labels are exclusively European (as you may have guessed), and include Vertigo, Etincelle and Bony. The most prevalent and playful pieces are by a label little known to these parts, called In Love—a cooperative effort of 35 designers who take their inspiration from the Parisian runways. The boutique is co-owned by one of these very designers, Yefrik Manni. Born and raised in Venezuela and Europe, she comes from a fashion family that owns shops in Dallas, L.A. and San Francisco. Manni feels Boston is ready for what she terms a "Beverly Hills style boutique," and even plans on expanding to Copley Place. Four Minutes to Beautiful... It's been the day from hell. Not even the giddiness you feel regarding your boss' imminent departure (if you believe office gossip) can bring back your glow. Now you can recapture the freshness of your morning visage with four products—in four minutes. Really! As part of her new line, Solutions, beauty expert Francesca Guerrera has developed a streamlined system, aptly named 4:45, for the time of day you need it most. There's Re-Fresh, a hydrating spray; Re-Finish, a primer; Re-Focus, an illuminating corrector; and Re-Set, a translucent powder. Available exclusively at Saks Fifth Avenue, 789 Boylston St., Boston (617-937-5324).

Make Your Own Merlot... Ralph Bruno has launched the Boston Winery, a unique venture right next door to his waterfront restaurant in Dorchester, Venezia. Bruno, a longtime North End resident who has been crafting vino most of his life, describes the business as a winery/wine-making society that will offer customers a chance to create their own blends. You can simply put in an order and let Bruno do the work (about $10 a bottle), or go through the entire year-long process from crushing the grapes to preparing the barrels to bottling the wine (about $2,500 to $6,000 per barrel, which incudes membership in the society). The wine-making begins in September, when the grapes arrive from California. 26 Ericsson St., Boston (617-265-9463). www.bostonwinery.net.

The Ames Building

Aim High... Spending $17.75 million on a makeover may sound extravagant, but to Normandy Real Estate Partners that's just what Boston's first skyscraper needs after eight years of neglect. Listed on the National Register of Historic Places, the Ames Building, erected circa 1889, could use some serious loving. And loving it's about to get. While maintaining its original masonry, the abandoned landmark will be transformed into a four-star 125-room boutique hotel by the end of next year. The Ames Building, 1 Court St., Boston.

Road Trip!... Sebastian Junger's The Perfect Storm was a giant shot in the arm to Gloucester tourism, spurring unprecedented interest in the North Shore fishing town. JUDGE NOT...

Somehow, I end up critiquing other people's moves at Dancing With the Stars of Boston.

When the Fields Corner Main Street organization e-mailed to ask if I'd serve as a judge at their Dancing With the Stars of Boston benefit, of course I said yes. Why? Because I care about serving my community and improving the city in which we live. Because the UMass Boston dance program deserves recognition. But mostly because you don't get many chances in life to critique Oil Can Boyd on his cha-cha moves.

That's right, Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd, '80s Red Sox pitcher extraordinaire, is one of the unlucky souls slated to have his dancing chops evaluated by yours truly. Also taking the stage are local luminaries such as ex-Patriots linebacker Andre Tippett and comedian Steve Sweeney. The format is much like the event's namesake TV show, with each contestant paired with a pro dancer—or in this case, a dance student from UMass. I've only seen the actual TV show a couple times, but I already know which judge I want to emulate: Bruno.

As opposed to the American Idol judges, who typically try to deliver some type of constructive criticism, Bruno simply turns off his internal monologue and spouts a stream-of-consciousness rant whenever called upon for his opinion. Actual Bruno quotes include, "Your body was like a jumping goat!" and "Crazy bear has been let loose in a cheerleading competition tonight!" I guess these are the kind of thoughts that start popping into your head when you're forced to evaluate the gyrations of Mr. Ian Ziering week in and week out.

Prior to the competition, I hang out in the guys' dressing room, where Oil Can is nervously awaiting his turn on stage. "Hey Tip," he says to Tippett, "I'm sweating here, man. When I'm on the mound, I don't hear the fans at all. I can hear the right-fielder talking to me, but not the fans. This is different."

I can relate. I don't know what Oil Can did to prepare for his turn onstage, but if I had to get up there my chosen dance partner would be Jim Beam. You know you're a bad dancer if your friends can do a dance named after you, and let's just say that "the Ezra," which involves a lot of air-ass-slapping (like air guitar, but with ass-slapping), is a popular one at clubs and weddings. That said, I can occasionally take it to the next level: I don't want to brag, but twice in my dancin' career women have asked me if I'm gay.

When the show starts, though, I'm [illegible] I'm safely camped out behind the judg[illegible] table. When Oil Can and his partner [illegible] their routine, I yell, "Oil Can? More [illegible] Oil Can't Be Stopped!" in my best Br[illegible] accent. To Tippett, I shout, "You're [illegible] giant graceful swan, a swan who [illegible] break me in half with one flap of its wing[illegible] One pair of contestants does a dance [illegible] the Posada, which I use as an excuse [illegible] make fun of Yankees catcher Jorge Po[illegible] Bruno knows how to play to a crowd.

Unfortunately, Bruno also gets a little [illegible] ried away now and then and forgets th[illegible] fellow judge, sitting two seats away, [illegible] Honorable Mayor Thomas M. Menino. [illegible] ing Steve Sweeney's routine, set to "Ma[illegible] No. 5," Sweeney keeps holding up five [illegible] gers every time the "mambo number" [illegible] line comes around. "Steve Sweeney," I [illegible] "No matter what anybody says, you proven that you can count to five!" This [illegible] a laugh and I should stop there but [illegible] judgment isn't one of my strong suits. [illegible] follow up with, "And I hear he can cou[illegible] high as 21, as long as he takes off his pa[illegible] The audience gasps, making that unive[illegible] "Oh no you didn't!" sound that you [illegible] hear only on sitcom laugh tracks. Bad luck turns worse for the artists formerly known as the Boston Celtics.

When I was a kid, I used to have this recurring nightmare where I was being chased by a truck co-driven by Gumby and Large Marge from Pee-wee's Big Adventure. Never in my life have I been more frightened than I was after one of those dreams. It was horrible, and as ridiculous as this sounds, I always considered it to be my own personal worst nightmare.

Well, Gumby and Marge, please move to the backseat. You've been replaced.

On Tuesday, May 22, I lived through my real worst nightmare, and it all began with "And the fifth pick goes to… the Boston Celtics." I never thought a mere nine words could send me into such a tailspin. (Aside from maybe, "Rich, it's Britney Spears. I'm late and it's yours.") But they did, and in the aftermath of this nightmare-turned-reality, I've come to a stark conclusion.

When future Celtics fans study this era, they'll find a laundry list of unfortunate events and flagrant eff-ups that turned the most storied franchise in professional sports into a joke. They'll read about the deaths of Red Auerbach, Reggie Lewis and Len Bias, the giving away of Joe Johnson, Chauncey Billups, Ben Wallace and others, the Pitino Era, the 1997 lottery, Vin Baker, Lucky the Mascot, Paul Gaston, Chris Wallace, Danny Ainge, the hiring and re-hiring of Doc Rivers, and all the other horrific details. But when they read about the 2007 lottery, they will, despite all the heartache that preceded it, be reading about the lowest point of the darkest era of Celtics basketball.

You might argue that missing out on Tim Duncan in 1997 was more painful, especially since he's about to lead San Antonio to its fourth title in 10 years, but consider this: Back in '97, the Celtics were only five years removed from a 50-win season. Sure, it burned when we lost out on the big guy, but Celtic Nation had yet to really suffer. We still had two lottery picks; we still had hope. We were rebuilding, and while we knew doing so without Duncan would be a little more difficult, we still believed the team was moving in the right direction, and it wouldn't be long before the Green returned to dominance.

In 2007, we aren't so naïve. We know that landing Greg Oden or Kevin Durant is the only shot to pull us out of this mess. And now that it's not happening, we essentially have nothing.

We have a team that, outside of a very small segment of the population, nobody really cares about. We have a front office, led by Danny Ainge, that has made countless mistakes over the past five years and has to fess up to any of them. We have a co Doc Rivers, who was just signed to an ex sion so unbelievable he must have com mising photos of Ainge's wife and Cos the BYU mascot, locked in a safe so where. We have one legitimate super Paul Pierce, who's one of the greatest tal in franchise history but is getting older more impatient by the day. We have budding superstar, Al Jefferson, who's the only real asset (besides one expiring tract) the team has to package with the pick in exchange for a Kevin Garnett– Jermaine O'Neal–caliber talent. After we have some potential stars like R Rondo, Gerald Green and Delonte W but for this franchise, potential just good enough anymore.

And more potential is all I see com the team's way next season, no matter they select with the fifth pick—and e cially if you believe the rumors that A has fallen in love with Chinese big ma Jianlian. The only way they get any be is to bring in another star to play Pierce, but the only way they do th probably by parting with Big Al, somet they seem committed not to do. As you see, it's going to be ugly, and frankly, I know what to make of it anymore.

But what I do know is this: At s point in the future, the Boston Ce will win their 17th NBA champions Whether any of us will still be alive w this happens, I can't say—at gunpo I'd guess we'll all be gone, and Williams will once again be living– eventually, a 17th banner will be se the rafters. And when it is, the cu era of Celtics basketball will be re bered as the darkest and most desp in franchise history.

Now if you'll excuse me, I'm going rent Pee-wee's Big Adventure and s Large Marge can't help knock the lc out of my head. IB

True Camp Stories

Noogies! Nicknames! Nudity!

Recently, a client called me to rant about the price of summer camp, which costs him $3,700 per child. "My college tuition was less than these camps. You'd think they pump Evian out of the goddamn water bubblers."

Most of today's young parents want their kids with the family all the time, but I was sent off to camp at age 10 for the standard eight-week session. A vacation for my parents, but an anxious trip for me. I was lonely on the hours-long train trip from North Station to Portland, Maine. Back then in June, North Station was packed with hundreds of children, all in camp uniforms, herded by counselors with whistles on lanyards, assembling their flock. Parents were also there, but not hovering over every sniffle or lugging toys, iPods and other bribes. (I know, I know—every generation believes the next one is going totally to hell.)

That camp in Maine proved to be a defining experience. It taught me about sportsmanship, how to live with a diverse group of people, and above all else, it taught me that there was a lot of ridiculousness in life and that a sense of humor may be our most important quality. Since then, I've mistrusted anyone without that eye for the absurd.

Some might be horrified by the camp antics then: Counselors actually gave "noogies"—quick jabs to the shoulder muscles with an extended middle knuckle—to misbehaving campers. They'd also come into cabins late at night and roust troublemakers, who then had to bend over for a brief spanking with a broom or canoe paddle. If you mouthed off again, you'd be paddled wearing a wet bathing suit—which really hurt. We also received "Indian burns" (hands twisting the wrist flesh), "barber's itch" (knuckles rubbing your head hard) and "aardvarks" (leg pinching). Of course, kids would also try these smaller tortures on each other.

There was a totem pole down by the lake. At the top was carved a likeness of the owner, with his big bald head and a cigar in his hand. Years later, when I was a camp counselor, a group of rowdy counselors placed a tape recorder in the woods, timed to go on around 2 am with loud noises of howling animals, bugles blowing and hyena laughter, followed by various bathroom imitations and a gigantic flushing sound. Of course, it woke everyone up and infuriated the owner. But not as much as the next morning... when the totem pole was missing. State police found it three days later, washed ashore on the opposite side of the lake. The head had been cut off and was never recovered.

Did parents ever complain about their children's treatment? When I was about 11, the owner came into our bunks one rest period. I was scrawling a mandatory postcard to my folks. He stopped and asked me, "What's your flower name?" I had no idea what he was talking about. My counselor was frantically giving me hand signs and nodding like mad behind the owner's back. I looked at the owner and said the name of my mother's favorite flower: "Nasturtium." The owner turned on his heel and walked out. Evidently, one of my bunkmates had told his parents that the counselor called him "Lilac" because of his peculiar, unwashed smell. When confronted, the counselor told the owner, "We give all the kids flower names. It's fun."

Nicknames abounded at camp. Over the years I knew Spider, Big Bertha, Slugg, Sagansky, Digger (whose dad was an undertaker), Pig, Bookie (a former head of the Dana-Farber) and Kotex.

One year when I was in the infirmary with chicken pox, an older boy with a broken arm said, "Wanna see a miracle?" Even at 10, I didn't think I wanted to see a miracle. But he urged, "Just down the hall, c'mon." I padded after him in my pajamas with the sewn-in nametags. He stopped outside the only bathroom, on top of an outdoor porch. To the side of the door was a small hole, stuffed with toilet paper. He pulled out the paper and motioned me to look through. Still wary of some prank, I looked—and there was the camp's secretary, just coming out of the bath. "Told ya it was a miracle," he said, pushing me away. "See, kid? Camp is more than football drills and singin' round the campfire."

Was camp a place of punishment? Hardly. Every year I get calls for reunion dinners organized by endless loyal alumni. They believe camp was the best time of their lives. Two of my fellow campers still call me every week. We shoot the breeze about our lives and about the laughs we had in childhood. I always promise to give them both noogies when I see them again. IB

BERT AND JOHN JACOBS

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Bert and John Jacobs are the brothers behind the brand Life Is Good, a $100 million-per-year juggernaut based in Boston. Needham natives, they're the youngest of six siblings. Bert graduated from Villanova in 1987 with a degree in advertising, after which he enjoyed stints as a ski instructor, pizza delivery man and substitute teacher. John graduated in 1990 from UMass with a dual degree in art and English and immediately began selling T-shirts after college. The pair officially launched Life Is Good in 1994, initially selling shirts on the street and living out of their van. Today, the company's cartoon logo, Jake, and his optimistic message are sold in nearly 5,000 retailers nationwide and in 28 countries. Despite Bert's degree, the company spends no money on advertising and instead has made philanthropy central to its mission. Life Is Good Festivals have raised more than $1.2 million for select children's charities in the past three years, while attracting more than 250,000 festival-goers nationwide. More than 25 communities across the country as well as in Scotland and Japan will hold Life Is Good Festivals in 2007, and on July 7, Life Is Good at Fenway will celebrate life with food, music, games and a crowd of 20,000 to benefit Project Joy and the Red Sox Foundation (and to determine who is the World's Greatest Backyard Athlete). Both of the Jacobs live in the Back Bay.

Jonathan Soroff: OK, if life is good, does that mean death is bad?

Bert Jacobs: Not necessarily. We don't know. Might not be.

John Jacobs: If you've done what you could while you're here, it's probably OK.

JS: How high were you guys when you came up with the idea for Life Is Good?

JJ: Bert had a very bad crack habit at the time. I was fairly clean, weaning myself off of heroin.

BJ: Just remember: Without the crack, we wouldn't be here.

JS: That's really inspiring. So how much of your success was dumb luck and how much was hard work?

JJ: Fifty-fifty.

BJ: I think we've always worked hard, but we'd be kidding ourselves and anyone reading this if we said we deserved all the fortunate things that have happened. We had a lot of great friends and fantastic employees who helped along the way, and a lot of luck.

JS: Were both of you always Pollyanna types?

JJ: Bert especially enjoys the term "Pollyanna" applied to himself, but I would say we've both always been optimistic. That's really due to our parents and the house we grew up in.

BJ: Yeah, Mom had a lot to do with it.

JS: Ever think you'd get so rich off such a simple idea?

BJ: Define "rich."

JS: OK, exactly how rich are you? Your company's doing $100 million a year.

BJ: I think we were always very ambitious. I'm both joking and not joking about the word "rich," because the most important element of richness we've derived from all this has nothing to do with finance. The business has been a vehicle for us to do a lot of things we otherwise wouldn't have been able to do.

"WE FEEL VERY FORTUNATE THAT FROM DAY ONE, WE WERE DOING STUFF WE LIKED TO DO."

JS: Well, certainly having a lot of money and living well are two completely different things.

JJ: Right, and our tagline speaks to that: "Do what you like. Like what you do." We feel very fortunate that from day one, even when we were sleeping in the van, we were doing stuff we liked to do: traveling, playing Frisbee, talking to people, designing shirts.

BJ: One of the funniest things that people assume is that life was really difficult when we were selling shirts on the streets and sleeping in the van, and that now that the business has grown so much, now life is good. They totally miss the point; life was good then. We felt that very much even at the time.

JS: OK, your biggest indulgence or extravagance?

BJ: I used to eat regular Cheerios. I went to the Honey Nut Cheerios at about the $50 million mark, and I enjoy it.

JJ: You're leaving out the Cristal you order at every dinner and the obscene parties with rap artists. To be honest, I know it sounds corny, but for me, it's being able to live in the Back Bay.

BJ: Also, we were never able to pick up a tab. We just didn't have the means to do that, and I love to buy dinner or drinks for friends.

JJ: So when do you plan to start doing that?

JS: OK, so Bert, did you really once leap-frog six standing people?

BJ: I did, and I probably shouldn't have because now I can never live it down. People are always saying, "Hey! Jump over this guy!" Everyone has a stupid human talent.

JJ: There was an injury the last time he tried it. A bloody uncle at a family wedding. No joke. It was a spectacular ending to the wedding.

JS: John, is your title really Chief Creative Optimist?

JJ: That's correct. "Officer" just doesn't fit in our company. And I won't apologize for it.

JS: Strangest place you've ever seen or put your logo?

BJ: Definitely soldiers. No matter where you stand politically with respect to the war, you have to appreciate that the soldiers aren't the ones making the decisions, and we've gotten a lot of mail from soldiers in Iraq. We got a request for Frisbees; there were two soldiers teaching young Iraqi kids how to play ultimate Frisbee. They sent us photos and we were so blown away, we sent them boxes of Frisbees and also stickers, and they started putting them on the Checkpoint Charlies. We were really blown away by that.

JJ: On a lighter note, if you remember the runaway bride—she was sporting one of our hats while she was still on the lam.

JS: Is there one place you've refused or would never put your logo?

BJ: Well, we like a cold beer as much as the next guy, but the family unit has been so important to us as a consumer that we stay away from alcohol, drugs—

JJ: Porn as well.

JS: Any weird satirical takes on your brand?

JJ: Oh, there's definitely the "Life Sucks," and other things on T-shirts, but those generally last about three weeks.

BJ: These days, we generally see about one knock-off per week.

JS: So there's very little chance of seeing Life Is Good thongs, condoms, nipple clamps…

JJ: The last two, no. But the first, yes.

BJ: Y'know, the question of whether it's all sometimes too squeaky-clean, I think we've stayed true to the bread and butter of our business. But as we've evolved and learned more about making clothing, we've started a new line called Good Vibes by Life Is Good, aimed at a high-school through early 20s audience. It will probably be a little more sexy, fashionable, hip.

JJ: You can see it in our line now, and in spring '08 you'll see more body-conscious cuts.

JS: Worst thing that ever happened to you two?

BJ: I'd say when our sister had a skiing accident and suffered a spinal cord injury and became completely paralyzed in 1986. But the good news is that she had a series of operations that over a couple of years got her walking again. She has some limitations, but she's totally independent and living a great life.

JJ: Bert, what about your grade-school sweetheart moving to the West Coast? Is that up there?

JS: OK, I'm guessing your mascot is named Jake because of the expression "Everything's jake."

BJ: No, actually. It's that our last name is Jacobs, and growing up, everybody called us Jake. John and I didn't hang out that much when we were younger, but when we started our business, it was getting mixed up, both of us being called Jake. So we gave the mascot the name and did away with it for us.

JS: Your idea of a perfect summer day?

JJ: Frisbee and paddle-ball on Surfside Beach on Nantucket, followed by music and beers at the Chicken Box.

BJ: That, or a Red Sox game. We love the Red Sox.

JS: If life's so good naturally, then explain martinis and marijuana.

JJ: [Laughs.] They're short tricks. They just trick you for a little while.

JS: So what happens when you're in a shitty mood?

BJ: Happens all the time. We're no different than anyone else.

JJ: We just punch people in the face, and we feel better afterward. Of course, we do it with a smile.

JS: After years of trying, you broke the Guinness World Record for most lit jack o' lanterns. [They high-five.] What's next?

BJ: We're going to try to break the record for the largest game of catch. We're doing it at Fenway Park on 7/7/07.

JJ: Yeah, we'd love to get people fired up about that. Come out and join us that day.

JS: Last question: What are you going to have written on your tombstone?

JJ: "The Afterlife Is Good." IB

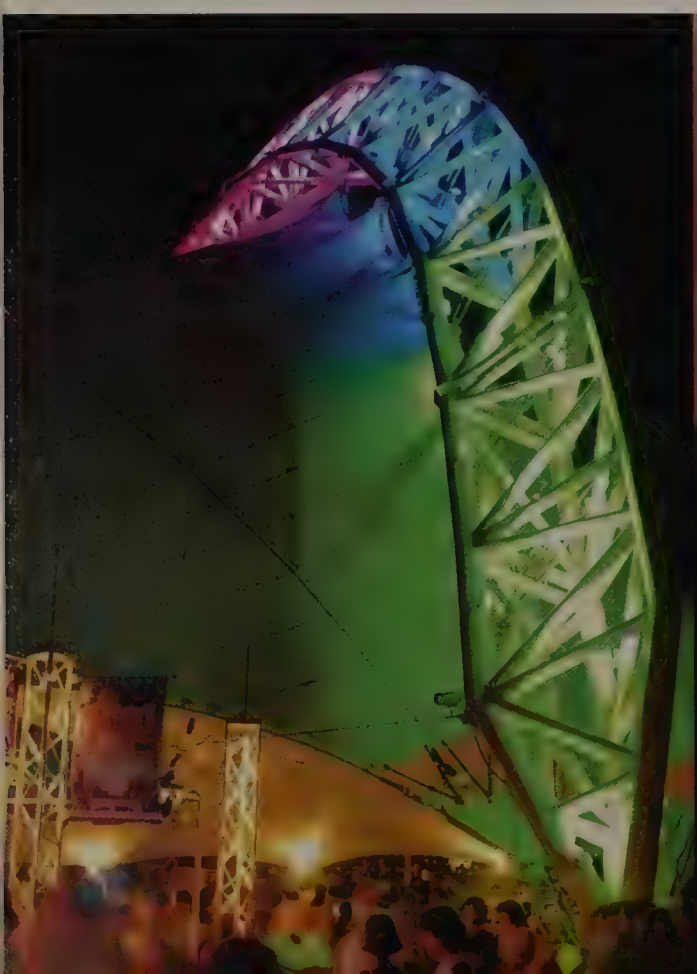
Roof Deck Overlooking Fenway Now Open

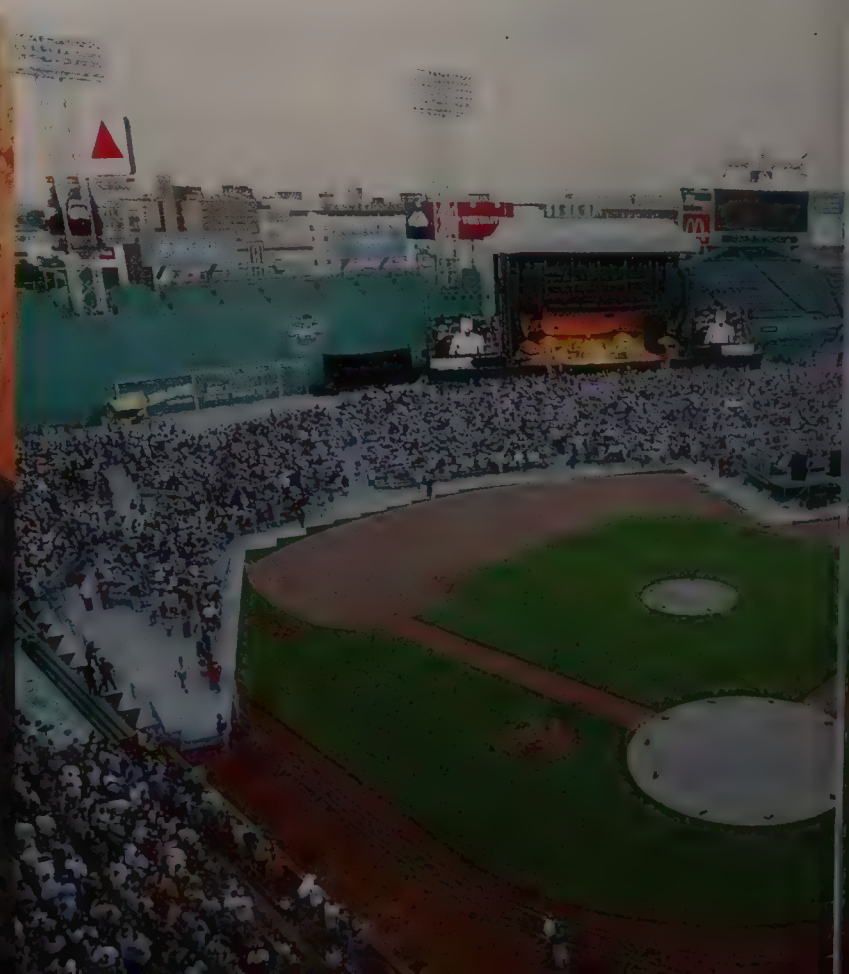
Get laid-back, folks. As in kick off your shoes, turn your face to the sun, and chill way, way out. The warm weather's precious in Boston, and priority one for the next three months is to savor every drop.

into the great wide open



Grab your picnic blanket and join the crickets for some outdoor music under the stars.
By Paul Robicheau

Boston-area concertgoers are spoiled year-round, but perhaps even more so in the summer, when outdoor venues come into play. True, we don't have a breathtaking natural space on par with Red Rocks in Denver or the Gorge outside Seattle. But the sail-white canopy known as the Bank of America Pavilion matches a striking waterfront setting with a broad, busy slate of acts, and lovely park spots abound from Boston to Lowell to Northampton to Newport, which is within a two-hour drive and offers a panoramic harbor view of actual white sails.



Now there's even Fenway Park, which isn't as beautiful for music as for baseball but gives its annual blockbusters a much cooler stadium playground than Foxboro. And while the warm weather tends to bring out the classic-rock perennials, hipper fare continues to infiltrate the sheds and tents—even in summer-stock carousels like the South Shore Music Circus and the Cape Cod Melody Tent, which have added New Wave and jam-bands to the seasonal standards of blues, soul, folk and country. For every artist that keeps it indoors (consider Feist/Grizzly Bear at Berklee June 9, Cat Power at Avalon July 8 and the White Stripes at Agganis Arena July 23), there's a Tool, Modest Mouse (heading the Download Festival Aug. 18) or Wu Tang Clan that's slated for the Tweeter Center. Yup, Wu Tang. This year, there's even a major hip-hop bill to shake it up under the stars. Here are 10 good outdoor bets within an easy ride from home.

Bob Dylan Pines Theater at Look Park in Northampton (June 26).
Look out: After a rumored bout with arthritis left him stagnant at a keyboard onstage, the bristly bard has been rocking an electric guitar again for his opening numbers, adding Modern Times gems to his rearranged canon of classics. And he's making his only area appearance at this gentle, tree-rimmed slope, although the show is a steep $70-plus per ticket. Mope-rock godfather Morrissey plays the Pines the next night, right after going up against Dylan at Boston's more convenient, urbane BofA Pavilion. Likewise, Wilco lives up to its new CD Sky Blue Sky at the Pines June 24 before rolling into the Pavilion June 28. www.iheg.com.

Tortoise Museum of Fine Arts Concerts in the Courtyard (July 5).
Semidormant in recent years (apart from a 2006 collaboration with Bonnie Prince Billy), Chicago's post-rock pioneers should nicely fit the ambiance of the MFA's Calderwood Courtyard with their minimalist indie-rock fusion of electronica and jazz. There are two shows, one early and one late. Vibraphones, anyone? In the same series, you can also enjoy West African guitar upstart Vieux Farka Touré (son of the late master Ali Farka Touré) July 25 and the

ol Tweeter Center (July 12).
spite a midtour break for surgery to repair namic drummer Danny Carey's torn eps, these dark metallurgists return for a rth area date in support of last year's neback album, 10,000 Days. And that's a ak for us: This tour has been astounding diences with its relentless sonic attack, mplemented by unsettling projections. r a parallel experience (down to a drum bl in Neil Peart) with more optimistic ults, catch Rush at the Tweeter June 27. ww.livenation.com.

een River Festival Greenfield Community ollege (July 20 and 21).
bom to picnic, ethnic delicacies, day- ng kids' activities and a smart neo-roots heup led by blues guitar ace Buddy Guy, -country siren Neko Case, soul reviver mes Hunter and the country trashabilly outhern Culture on the Skids. And that's st Saturday (the Subdudes and Terrence mien headline Friday night). But what ally sets this Western Massachusetts fes- al apart are its hot-air balloons, with les for purchase and a 9:30 pm Saturday alloon illumination" after the music ops. It's all less than two hours from oston. www.greenriverfestival.com.

he Cat Empire Copley Square (July 26).

Rock the Bells Tour Tweeter Center (July 26).
Alas, the reunited Rage Against the Machine isn't scheduled to make this Boston-area show before dates in New York. But a hip-hop trifecta of the Wu Tang Clan (who are making their own ballyhooed return, minus the late Ol' Dirty Bastard), Nas and Cypress Hill should smoke the Mansfield joint with gritty, streetwise wordplay. www.livenation.com.

The Police Fenway Park (July 28 and 29).
"De Do Do Do, De Da Da Da." Boy, some of those tunes from 1980's Zenyatta Mondatta were silly as Sting became increasingly pretentious. How ironic that after recording an album of lute music, he decided that it was time to reunite his old rock trio for big bucks. Nonetheless, there was no mistaking the melodic gifts of the group's singer-bassist, the impressionistic icing of guitarist Andy Summers and the whiplash accents of drummer Stewart Copeland, who's probably the best reason to treat your senses to this event—and maybe even sing "De Do Do Do, De Da Da Da," or the many better songs the Police hatched into the hair decade. www.livenation.com.

The Allman Brothers Band Dunkin' Donuts Newport Folk Festival (Aug. 4) and BofA Pavilion (Aug. 7 and 8).
This Southern rock institution has found a transcendent guitar tandem in Warren Haynes and Derek Trucks, a slide prodigy who's truly come into his own. And after an annual run at New York's Beacon Theater that sported nightly jazz covers, the band is topping a jam-centric day at the ever-morphing Newport Folk Fest with a "concert-length" set (the folkies return the next day with Alison Krauss and Emmylou Harris). But it's hard not to favor two nights at Boston's intimate Pavilion, the group's first in-town shows in 13 years and a rare local opportunity to indulge in two entirely different sets. www.newportfolk.com; www.livenation.com.

JVC Jazz Festival Newport at Fort Adams State Park in Newport, R.I. (Aug. 12).
Newport's jazz lineup seems less eye-popping than usual. But setting Etta James, Al Green and B.B. King to close the third day back-to-back retains the festival's historical legacy. To watch those legends of R&B, soul and blues gracing the same stage is something you'll never see again and will remember for years to come. For Labor Day Weekend alternatives, there are also the Tanglewood Jazz Festival and Rhode Island's Rhythm & Roots Festival. www.festivalproductions.net.

Koko Taylor/Shemekia Copeland Lowell Summer Music Series at Boarding House Park (Aug. 23).
A powerhouse pairing of old-school and new-school blues that stands out on this series' largest schedule to date. Gravel-voiced belter Taylor, the undisputed Queen of the Blues, has done for her genre what Aretha Franklin did for soul. Now almost 80, Taylor even came back strong from 2003 surgery that left her breathing on a ventilator. Copeland, meanwhile, has followed in Taylor's footsteps as a volcanic singer. The daughter of the late Johnny Copeland has delved more into soul, R&B, jazz and funk while giving the blues a more contemporary edge. www.lowellsummermusic.org. iB

Summer's the time to relax, and what better mood enhanc than a glass of wine? The great thing about our developing love affair with vino—Americans now prefer it to beer or spirits, according to recent Gallup polls—is the variety. If yo crave flavor and the thrill of discovering something new, yo never have to drink the same thing twice. This incredible diversity can, however, yank some people ou of a comfort zone straight into a world of confusion. And when it comes to pairing wi with food, there's a lot of advice bordering on attitude out there.

What's more all-American than grilled hamburgers? Nothing screams out more for a flavorful, easygoing, affordable red wine that has tons of red black fruit to match the juicy meat and very little complexity. There are tons of wines that fill the bill, but I have to go with my current favorite in the deep value category, Argentine malbec. And because we're feeling generous today, we'll recommend one that will save you a ton of money: a 2005 Terra Rosa from the Mendoza district in Argentina ($11). If this makes you feel unpatriotic, it's actually made by an American, Patrick Campbell of Laurel Glen Vineyards in California. Richly textured with smooth, lush, creamy red fruit and spicy chocolate accents, it blends seamlessly with a burger—the more char-grilled the better.

If your cookout shopping list typically includes a package of franks, why not upscale it a notch and opt for Italian sausage, served with grilled peppers and some spicy mustard? Salty, tangy and bursting with flavor, they're perfectly paired with a tart, grapefruit sauvignon blanc such as you find from the Marlborough district of New Zealand. These wines are so fun and casual you don't have to bring a corkscrew: The bottle stopper is a metal screw cap. So which one? Kim Crawford's 2006 ($18). But you have to like grapefruit, because that's what it tastes like, bitter rind and all—though the wine flavors are softened and toned down a bit when served with the sausage.

Barbecued chicken is another spring and summer favorite you can enjoy with a wide range of wines. The smokier and the more tender the meat, though, the more refreshing I want the wine to be in the warm weather. My choice: the 2006 Crios Rose de Malbec ($11), again from Argentina's Mendoza district. What? They make a rosé out of it, too? Either that or this is a red wine masquerading as one. Dry rosés are wonderful seasonal choices, wines with real flavor you can cool down and have two glasses of outdoors at a picnic. In fact, being outdoors during spring and summer is the ultimate time to think pink in terms of wine. This glowing, festive beauty sports a cherry, herbed aroma, bright, zippy berry fruit and a tart, tangy finish that makes the chicken more refreshing.

Fish tacos are a south-of-the-border specialty that can be hot to very hot, depending on how heavily you want to adjust the seasoning. I'm always looking to cool flavors like this down, so my recommendation is a chilled sparkling wine, the Casteller Brut NV Cava from Spain ($10). This charming, vibrant bubbly has a slightly lemony, grilled-bread aroma and a relatively round, smooth texture that provide a great backdrop for the dish, particularly if there's any guacamole involved. The wine's made in the traditional method, like champagne, but runs about 25 percent of the price. Don't ever forget the bubbles when you've got a peppery, hot summertime dish you want to moderate a bit.

Swordfish kabobs come in many forms depending on your marinade and whether you're grilling with a sauce, but let's say you're going basic; after all, it's too hot to bother. Red wine with fish, anyone? Let's go to Australia: a 2005 Cimicky "Trumps" Grenache/Shiraz ($16) from the Barossa Valley. Wow! The wine's a stunner, just oozing dark red cherry fruit flavors, vanilla and a powerful, peppery earth finish. Here's a case where the dish may play second fiddle to the beverage, allowing its brilliant flavor to shine forth undisturbed. Make sure you don't serve this too warm (as in above 70 degrees), as it'll throw the wine completely out of balance. If you're unfamiliar with grenache, this is a great introduction. If you've already tried the grape, stay tuned, because it's going to be The Next Thing.

A clambake involves many different taste and texture elements: earthy, meaty clams, corn on the cob, often chorizo or other sausages. Everything's chewy, and there are sweet flavors in abundance. You probably thought we forgot about chardonnay. But how could we leave America's sweetheart out of the equation? Yes, it's still the most popular wine in the universe, and even though we're being told not to drink it because it's too common, we like the way it tastes and we're not listening. There are chardonnays to fit every budget and palate, but I'm recommending something buttery here, something smoky and oak-aged that you can quaff in great mouthfuls—an impressive wine whose flavors won't disappear alongside the boldness of the food: a 2005 Chateau Souverain Chardonnay ($18) from Sonoma. The fruit flavors are ripe, not quite tropical, with a velvety texture and just a subtle hint of toast. If you like this style, it doesn't get much better from anywhere in the world for under $20.

Why the South Shore's waves stack up By Matt Heid | Photographs By David Clifford

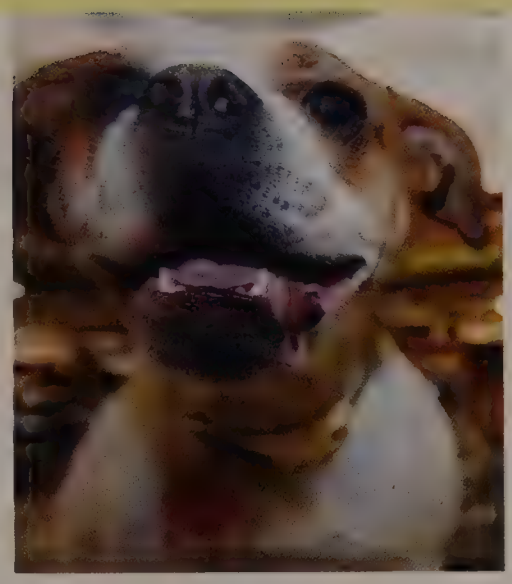
these are the breaks

I learned to surf in Northern California at Linda Mar Beach just south of San Francisco, where the breaks ar mellow and the crowds are huge. But I live to surf in Ne England, where the waves are good, the vibe is friendly and the breaks are empty. And few spots are as empty, or as enticing, as those found south of Boston in the quiet seaside towns of Scituate and Marshfield.



The fact that there are surfable waves a few miles from Boston surprises a lot of people, but it isn't really a closely guarded secret. The big secret down here is that there are more than two dozen point breaks hidden along the craggy coastline, their locations known only to a handful of dedicated locals—who aren't about to reveal their whereabouts.

"Go relax! Go relax!" Mark Keup, owner of the Nor'Easter Surf Shop in Scituate, commands his 2-year-old bulldog Spot, who's pushing a large, slimy green ball against my leg. Spot toddles off toward the 20 surfboards for sale in the back of the building. The large store is empty on this quiet weekday afternoon, and Keup, a strung 40-something going on 25, hops back to a counter behind the register.

This small Massachusetts enclave is pretty far off the world's surfing radar. "When people think of New England, surfing isn't the first thing that pops [to mind]," Keup says. "You ask the average person in Boston where you can surf around here, and they'll look at you like you have two heads."

The main reason why? New England's surf season has little overlap with the beach-going days of summer, when crowds throng the coast to splash in a warm and placid sea. To most people, their beach experience suggests one thing: "Waves? What waves?" But from late summer into the fall, as hurricanes track into the north Atlantic, swell arrives in New England. It continues through the winter and spring, fed by seething Nor'easters and other localized storm systems. And enthusiastic surfers hit it year-round.

In winter, when the water temps drop into the mid-to-upper 30s, everybody wears head-to-toe neoprene, including ultra-thick booties and gloves. You have to, or the frigid water will burn like fire on your naked skin. In the right gear, I've found winter surfing to be perfectly comfortable. It's changing in the parking lot that's the real test.

The ocean warms up over the summer, rising to reach its balmiest temperatures (mid-to-upper 60s) in August and September, and remaining well into the 50s through October. These three months are New England's prime surf season.

New England surfers are one of the few groups of people that fervently hope for intense hurricane seasons. Some years are legendary. "The summer of 1995 was amazing surf," Keup recalls. "Every storm made the right track to feed us." He illustrates his enthusiasm by showing me a large hand-drawn chart tracing that year's hurricanes, which he has posted in a corner of the store.

Most of the time, however, surfers deal with long flat spells, especially in the summer.

"You have to be patient to be a surfer in New England," Keup advises. This is especially true on the South Shore. Cape Cod blocks a lot of waves from reaching the area; swell coming from the south to southeast fails to reach Scituate, though it will create rideable conditions at points north of Boston. To reach the South

Clockwise from top: Spot the bulldog keeps the customers company at the Nor'Easter Surf Shop in Scituate; Levitate Boarding Co. in Marshfield also caters to the South Shore crowd; local John Basile catches a wave.

Shore, waves need to come more from the east, a less common swell direction. "I'd say it's surfable around here maybe 75 to 100 days a year," Keup says. "[It's] really good, maybe like, 50."

A handful of well-known breaks dot the coast. Three-mile-long Nantasket Beach in Hull is the friendliest, with pleasant waves, myriad peaks and a gentle sandy bottom. In north Scituate, Egypt Beach is a steep cobblestone strand that offers quality low-tide beach breaks—another good spot for developing surfers. Just south of the town center, Peggotty Beach sits below a granite point, which extends out to sea as a submerged reef. This more advanced spot provides some of the area's longest rides, which wall up nicely on the inside section.

Past these breaks, the coastline shelters a mix of rocky points, underwater reefs and gravelly beaches. And for those in the know, an abundance of secret surf locations. "There are 25-plus rideable point breaks on the South Shore," Keup claims. "And that's being conservative. A lot aren't accessible. Some are real long walks. You have to know somebody." He speculates that maybe 50 people know all the spots.

One of them may be Roger Beal, who strolls into the store. His shaggy haircut, greying sideburns and relaxed demeanor speak to his 38 years as a surfer. "Oh, yeah. I'm a lifer." Originally from La Jolla, Calif., where he spent several years shaping boards for Rusty Surfboards, Beal has been riding the South Shore now for more than a decade. "I like it. It's not really crowded. People are friendly."

People like Kevin Womersley, 26, who stands behind the register at Levitate Boarding Co. in Marshfield. The only surf shop in town, Levitate recently relocated to a prominent location along Route 3A in the town center, next to the skate park and in the former home of the Vacuum House.

"There are dozens of breaks around here," Womersley enthuses, pointing to a picture on the wall of a surfer tucked into a peeling head-high wave. "That's me at a spot down the street." I press him for a more exact location. He looks momentarily nonplussed. "I can't tell you that."

In California, I've counted more than 200 people in the water at popular spots like Linda Mar. In New England, 10 to 15 people in the water is considered crowded. With fewer surfers, there's less competition for waves, and the resulting vibe in the water is usually relaxed and welcoming. Localism is almost nonexistent in this part of the surf universe. "There's no need to get aggro in the water," Womersley agrees.

In general, waves on the South Shore are friendly and inviting, seldom more than waist-to-chest high. "The South Shore is a good place to learn," he says. "But it's a hard place to progress." Womersley estimates that "each surf spot gets epic maybe a dozen times a year," but that overall the limited waves make it difficult to develop a surfer. The only thing to do is hit it as often as possible.

"Once you start surfing, it becomes more of a lifestyle," he muses. "You wo your life around it. If you play baseball or soccer, the field is always there. But for waves, you're pretty much on call. There's such a narrow window of oppo tunity, you do whatever you have to d to get it. You have to be tenacious and persistent."

The only other customer in the store, friend of Womersley's, overhears us and clarifies: "No, you have to be obsessed."

Learn to Surf on the South Shore

Surfing is a challenging sport. It's also extremely addictive. The learning curve can be steep, especially at the beginning. You'll need to build upper body strength, gain comfort in the turbulence of breaking waves and learn how to pop up quickly once you catch a swell. But once you start, you may never stop. Both the Nor'Easter and Levitate surf shops offer lessons, gear included, to help you experience the joys of the sport first-hand.

Nor'Easter Surf Shop 376 Gannett Road, Scituate (store: 781-544-9283; surf report: 781-544-4610) www.noreastersurfshop.com. The Nor'Easter offers surf lessons when there are rideable waves for learning and maintains an on-call waiting list for would-be surfers. A one- to two-hour session covers the basics (board handling, paddling technique and popping up). Individual (one-on-one) lessons cost $60/hour, group lessons with three people or more, $40/hour per person. A rental surfboard and wetsuit are included in the price.

Levitate Boarding Co. 1871 Ocean St., Marshfield (store: 781-834-2755; surf report: 781-834-2766; kdubs.levitate@gmail.com). Levitate offers group lessons for up to 10 people. They cost $35/hour per person and typically take place at Rexhame or Humarock beaches in Marshfield. A rental surfboard and wetsuit are included in the price. —MH

GOOD(RIDGE) NEWS FOR GAY COUPLES

Courting Equality*, by Patricia A. Gozemba and Karen Kahn (with photographs by Marilyn Humphries), documents America's first legal same-sex marriages.

"Gays Wed, World Doesn't End." So read the Bay Windows' huzzah headline celebrating the Supreme Judicial Court's November 2003 Goodridge decision, which legalized same-sex marriages. With our stunning liberal bent and blue-swayed values, Massachusetts was the very place for the seven brave, bold plaintiffs to request the right, taken for granted by heterosexuals, to tie the knot. Relive those moments and experience their happy aftermath with Courting Equality. The pictures of protests and rallies—both the pro- and the anti- forces swarming with energy—make you feel like you're witnessing a combination of the American Revolution and a sizzling Red Sox game. Marginalized no more, these gay couples (in both senses of the word) are photographed goin' to the chapel, hugging kids, looking joyful, homey, even rather Hallmark-mainstream—at last. Two of the men were together 50 years before their wedding. The book traces major contemporary history, excitingly portraying the crusading force, social and political, it took to attain this right. But even after the big night, when Cambridge City Hall was hearteningly flooded with people seeking the first same-sex marriage licenses, they had to fight the possible undoing of the Goodridge decision. Luckily, it didn't come to that.

SPARKLE PLENTY

Every Little Thing (163 Harvard Ave., Allston; 617-202-4016) sells sweet Asian trinkets and jewelry.

There's something about Hello Kitty that satisfies an enduring desire for sweet girlish innocence, while bringing the comfort of the familiar, with perhaps a little hint of irony. This Asian shop's got that cat covered, offering a feline-rich playground of lunch boxes and alarm clocks, along with the famous pink backpacks, many bulging with a plumply stuffed Kitty. Chococat, a playmate, is on laundry baskets and little rugs. Another character, Monokuro Boo, a cute, half-abstract piggy, appears appropriately on piggy banks. Proclaiming from the entrance the miniature multiplicity and charm of the store's offerings are twinkling rows of jewelry, with lots of Swarovski crystal earrings, barrettes and trinkets. That cheerfulness aboun red and blue plastic hearts dangle optimistically from necklaces. A photo booth offers the chan to make stickers with you and little characters. Chatty encouragement accompanies a pen with twirly piece on top: "I want you to be happy." Even the shop's cautions about being careful with t delicate displays when wearing "long, thick winter clothing" are marvelously polite. Some Asi wrapping paper, more like cloth, comes in dreamy subtle shades. The allure of these little ador ments, both practical and charming, attracts grown-up girls, too, and their boyfriends.

CATCH SOME Z SQUARE

This lively Harvard Square spot is anything but sleepy.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

Chili-rubbed shrimp

Someone at Z Square is listening. In an early review of the restaurant, a critic panned the blandness of some of the food, noting disapprovingly the absence of salt shakers. On my recent visits to this lively, bifurcated eatery, giant salt and pepper shakers stood prominently on the tables, along with votive candles and heavy, absorbent white paper napkins. Z Square is split into an informal café that serves an all-day (8-12 am/10 pm on Sundays) menu and occupies the ground floor, and a downstairs dining room that closes a little earlier.

The restaurant takes its name from its location at Harvard Square and from the name of its owner, David Zebny, who opened his first Z restaurant on the West Coast and has another planned for Kenmore Square. Ensconced in the former space of a longtime fixture at this location, the Wursthaus, Z Square reflects the youth and lively ambiance of the Square, with the upstairs café offering a broad range of breakfast and lunch foods to fuel the energy needs of its kinetic clientele. While breakfast and lunch are also served in the downstairs dining room, that venue has a menu of its own that follows the more standard format of starters, main courses, sides and desserts. In addition, the bar and high cocktail tables at the foot of the stairs leading to the dining room offer a special bar menu. The welter of menus and choices may account for the unevenness that juxtaposed first-rate dishes with substandard ones. Fortunately, the former predominated.

The handsomely appointed dining room, separated from the bar by translucent glass windows, boasts a rich granite buffet or sideboard extending along one long wall. Local photographs hang above the sideboard, set off from the bold, claret-red wall by simple frames. Sliding doors can create one large or several smaller enclosed spaces to accommodate private parties or working meals in a third of the dining room, while the remainder is distinguished by a single, white, square column and high black ceiling with exposed ducts and conduits.

Although Z Square opened last fall, it went through a complete turnover of the kitchen staff earlier this year. The menu ranges from comfort food to ambitious undertakings, with main course prices in the teens and low 20s. For starters, I ordered the curried crab cakes ($12), which turned out to be one large, moist patty garnished with an orange-pineapple relish and organic greens. Its soft, creamy texture and combination of sweet, salty and spicy flavors provided a good appetite perker. Five good-sized shrimp with crunchy texture comprised the grilled chili-rubbed shrimp ($12). Their garnish, a salad of ripe mango, avocado and jicama (a South American legume) came dressed with a chimichurri vinaigrette. Although chimichurri, which in Argentina is served with meat, is typically made with parsley, garlic, onion and oregano, this sauce tasted of basil, like a well-constructed pesto. In any event, it proved a great enhancement to the shrimp and salad.

Pan-roasted mussels ($10) had been poached in a broth containing cherry tomatoes, fennel, garlic, green herbs an onions. A few slices of grilled toast pr vided a decent vehicle to mop up th sauce until I requested a spoon, whic turned out to be much more efficient an less fattening. Thin slices of apple, fer nel, feta cheese, walnuts, raisins, organi greens and a balsamic vinaigrette mad the Café Z salad ($7) a symphony of d lectable tastes and textures. In sorry cor trast to the superb texture of the shrim the pastas ranged from limp to soggy. I the linguini with pesto and green veget bles ($15), the flaccid texture of th pasta seemed to infect the vegetable which were tired and overdone. Th "ribbon noodles" that accompanied th shrimp puttanesca ($20) not only su fered from the same limp, starchy textu but made the dish look dreadful as wel detracting from the lively and tasty sau of capers, black olives, tomato, oregar and Asiago cheese.

Paella ($22), offered during my visi stood out among Z Square's main course This delectable dish has been appearin on local menus with increasing fr quency, and Café Z's paella proved one the best. Served in an authentic tw handled paella pan—paella was orig nally the name of the pan, and gave th name to the preparation—this magnif cent mélange of chicken, sausage, shrim mussels and littleneck clams came wi first-rate, crusty rice, glistening with glaze of saffron-infused olive oil, color golden and rendered aromatic with th exotic seasoning. Also offered during r visit was Z Square's "Wursthaus specia ($17), which paid homage to the spac previous tenant with a sausage love tour de force that included generous se ments of three kinds of sausage ma from combinations of beef, veal and po The sweetness of the accompanyi braised red cabbage complemented t distinctive flavors of the sausages: tw spicy, one salty—and all three boasti robust, meaty flavor. Hopefully the pae and Wursthaus special will reappear the menu.

Atlantic salmon ($20), carefully cook to preserve its delicate flavor and firm b moist texture, came with a decent, b too-cold artichoke and tomato relish. T non's two vegetable garnishes, wonful, buttery polenta and a tangle of gh, stemmy watercress, illustrated the ference between a garnish that enaces and an excrescence that distracts. ally, the rib-eye steak ($24) surprised when the waiter placed it before me, I thought he had brought someone e's order. At first glance it looked like a serole, with the steak lying underneath uge mound of shoestring sweet potato s, with a relish of smoky tomatoes and ers on one side and garlic-roasted ccoli on the other. Each of these ingrents could've been first-rate if handled re carefully and presented in a more petizing fashion. The imaginatively nceived relish had potential, but its gy, complex flavor had been muted by ng served refrigerator cold. The relish's mperature in turn cooled the fries and ndered them soggy. The steak itself oved tasty, but it lacked that wellred exterior and juicy interior texture at make eating a steak a tactile pleasure well as a treat for the taste buds.

Café Z's desserts ($6 each) included a edible molten chocolate cake with rich, tense chocolate, but menu description twithstanding, it was of room temperare rather than molten. It did come with refreshing scoop of ice cream. Crème brûlée, a pleasant confection of creamy burnt sugar, reminded me of Durgin Park's Indian pudding, mildly sweet with pleasantly earthy nuances. The seasonal fruit crisp (pears on this occasion) came in a large bowl that had been run under the broiler and superheated. The fruit crisp could've used its own scoop of ice cream—or even better, a dollop of whipped cream—to alleviate its dryness.

While the wine list at Café Z will soon change, during my visits it included a range of wines at affordable prices. The house Chianti ($6) showed forward fruit and sufficient acidity to make it a good accompaniment to the food. Two Tone Farm ($26) supplied a full-bodied, tannic cabernet sauvignon from Napa, while Lodi Vineyards' 2004 Ravenswood zinfandel ($36) was rich and complex, with a sturdy, tannic backbone to support its mouthfilling, full flavor.

Z Square's lively ambiance, enthusiastic, attentive servers and decent, sometime superior food make this a significant resource for that broad neighborhood constituency looking for something between down-market purveyors of fast food and upscale, white tablecloth emporia. The Wursthaus may be gone, but playing the nostalgia card, Z Square has hung on to the best of the wurst. iB

Frank About Fenway

Ballpark chef thinks outside the luxury boxes...

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Players get traded, and baseball stadiums get remodeled, but throughout Fenway Park's storied history, one fact remains: Nobody comes to the park expecting to find anything decent—or even decently priced—to eat. After all, we're a captive audience or, as Nookie says, "Fenway Park is the cash cow of Boston."

Nookie knows, because Nookie is Steve "Nookie" Postal, executive sous chef to Ron Abell, who's been executive chef at Fenway Park for about a year now. During that time, Abell—formerly of Icarus—and Postal—formerly of Oleana—have been overhauling the culinary offerings for the park's "premium" facilities and placing a new emphasis on ingredients that are organic, seasonal and sustainable.

Fenway Park executive chef Ron Abell

"We're frightening our purveyors," laughs Abell, who now oversees six kitchens and caters functions ranging from weddings to corporate meetings. "We tell them we need 200 pounds of Niman Ranch bacon, and they laugh at us!"

Well, what about those of us in the cheap seats? Abell promises ongoing upgrades and "healthier choices" at concessions stands, such as a fresh fruit cup with "no syrup [that's] going over really well." Consistency, he says, is key: It's important that the cooks know how to season peppers and onions for sausages the same way throughout the park. He's also focusing on "holding food less" so it tastes fresher, and he takes pride in the fact that the lobster in the concessions-stand lobster roll is from the exact same batch mixed up for the luxury box VIPs.

When the former Ritz, now the Taj Boston, unveiled its new identity in January, it announced the arrival of Katsuo "Suki" Sugiura, formerly of the Beverly Hilton, to fill the position of executive chef. Less than six months later, Suki has quietly returned to the West Coast to rejoin his wife and daughter, who reportedly resisted the move from Beverly Hills to Boston.

"He was so wonderful," says Taj PR director Caron LeBrun, "we were sad to see him go," but she adds that there's no shortage of talent at the plate. While a more permanent replacement is sought, a str of accomplished chefs from the likes of Pierre Hotel in New York and other properties are coming off the bench pinch-hit with power.

Four Wineries, No Waiting

Don't wait around to reserve a space at Four Seasons' Epicurean Evenings; Tuesday-night wine tastings at Aujourd' routinely sell out. June is pinot noir mo featuring selections from one Califo winery—Stephen Ross Wine Cellars—three from Oregon: A to Z Winewo Bethel Heights and Rex Hill, which just voted Winery of the Year by Wine Spirits magazine.

Chicken or Egg?

For those of us who don't sleep in on we ends and have already had our breakf long before noon, the prospect of weeke lunch is a welcome change from choos between eggs and omelets. Bricco in North End now serves an honest-to-go ness lunch menu on Saturday and Sun from noon to 4 pm. For less than $20, brunch alternative is chicken al matto marinated in seven spices, seared und brick, and served with prosciutto mas potatoes and Swiss chard. IB

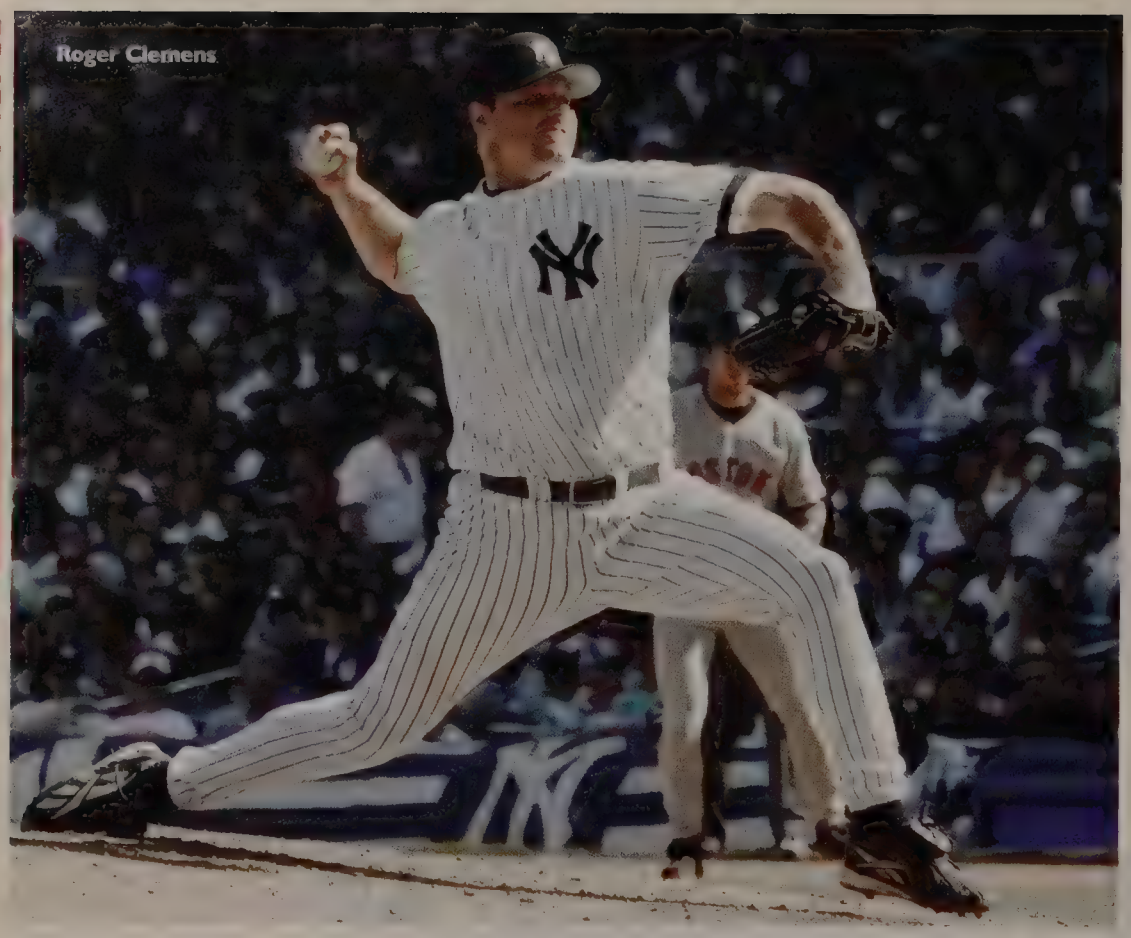
Tastings: Idols and Ice Cream



It's Scooper Bowl XXV, and to help commemorate a quarter-century's worth of ice-cream socials, the Jimmy Fund is going big. Live performances by American Idol stars Ayla Brown (season five) and Nick Pedro (season six) highlight three days of action. The event, which runs June 5-7 at City Hall Plaza, gives guests the chance to taste more than 40 different flavors from top purveyors (including Baskin-Robbins, Ben & Jerry's, Brigham's and Cold Stone) for only $7, but the fun doesn't stop with ice cream. Along with the Idols (June 6, 7-8 pm), there's also a celebrity dunk tank, Boston Cannons and Celtics games stations, an autograph session with the Patriots cheerleaders, and sets from performers like the Friends of Broadway, Tim Blane and Riverside Theater Works. All proceeds benefit the Jimmy Fund. City Hall Plaza, Boston (800-525-4669). www.scooperbowl.org. June 5 and 7, 11:30 am-6 pm; June 6, 11:30 am-8 pm. $7, ages 10 and up; $3, ages 3-9. —RL

Roger Clemens

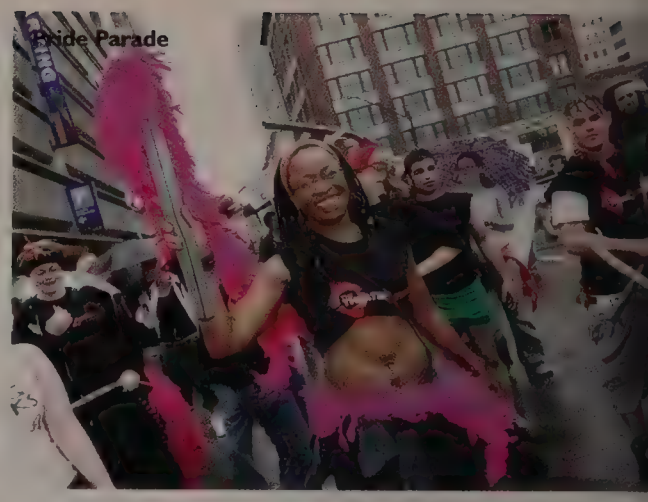
CityScope: Rippin' on Roger



Roger Clemens, oh how we loathe thee. Let us count the ways.... Actually, that might take a while, but on May 31 you'll have the chance to publicly voice your hatred for the Rocket. And if you do it well enough, you could win tickets to watch him get his ass kicked at Fenway. The night before the Sox' big three-game series against the Yanks (June 1–3), the Cask 'n Flagon is hosting a "Sock It to the Rocket" contest. From 7 till 9 pm, contestants get 21 seconds at the mike to publicly take Roger to task for signing with New York, and the winning ranter (chosen by a panel of judges including yours truly) scores two tickets to one of the three games. There's just one wrinkle that might increase the degree of difficulty: Profanity is prohibited. 62 Brookline Ave., Boston (617-536-4840). 7-9 pm. Free. —RL

Museums & Galleries: Grape Expectations

Spring is here, and the cultured kids all want to drink and talk art. Happily, the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum is hosting its first-ever wine tasting as a prelude to the September launch of a Thursday-night event series. "A Spring Serata" features live music, tasting stations in different galleries and a floral-themed tour of the museum's collection. A June evening in the mansion's courtyard sounds so very Boston. Really, who needs a roof deck? Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, 280 The Fenway, Boston (617-566-1401). www.gardnermuseum.org. 6-8 pm. $75; $65, museum members. —LPK

Gay & Lesbian: Pride and True

Boston knows how to celebrate Gay Pride Week, having done so for 37 years. And the parties just keep getting better. For one of the best, check out Faneuil Hall's festivities, taking place rain or shine. Things kick off with the Paws for Pride Canine Costume Contest, with prizes for Best in Size and Best in Show. A fashion show follows, where local celebrities parade their pooches in doggie clothes created by students from the School of Fashion Design. The afternoon entertainment starts at 1 pm, with performances by Voices Rising, a local women's chorus; the dance troupe Gays for Patsy; musicians Ellsworth and Hicks; and electronic music master Michael Hensley. *Faneuil Hall Marketplace, Boston (617-262-9405). www.bostonpride.org. 10 am-5 pm. Harpoon Brewstock Festival

FRI.–SAT./JUNE 1–2

CityScope: Forever Young

Who could forget their 21st birthday? The rite of passage, the step into adulthood, the legal ticket to a lifetime of debauchery. Harpoon Brewery gets it, which is why they're celebrating their own 21st in style at the annual Brewstock Festival. Sip on Harpoon's favorite summer beers, listen to live tunes from local acts including the Fools and Joel Cage, and feast on barbecue prepared by Tremont 647's Andy Husbands. The fun continues Saturday morning with the Harpoon Five-Miler Road Race and a post-run party under the festival tents. You know, for the seasoned drinkers who can handle a hangover. Harpoon Brewery, 30 Northern Ave., Boston (888-427-7666). www.harpoonbrewery.com. Fri., 5:30-11 pm; Sat., 2-9 pm. $15. —LPK

Funny Baby

Knocked Up is a laugh-out-loud comedy.

BY SEAN BURNS

It's no secret that the vast majority of big-screen comedies have been dumbed-down, cleaned-up and significantly broadened in recent memory. In fact, a passing glance at this year's releases might lead you to conclude that there's nothing at all funny about modern American life, save for whichever silly wig Will Ferrell or Napoleon Dynamite happen to be wearing at the moment, and maybe that strange and unfortunately flourishing subgenre about how embarrassing it is to be mistaken for a homosexual. Buffoonish late-period SNL slapstick surrealism and random non sequiturs seem to be the order of the day, which is just one of the many reasons why Judd Apatow's Knocked Up feels like such a breath of fresh air.

Katherine Heigl and Seth Rogen get knocked up.

Imagine, if you will, a laugh-out-loud mainstream studio comedy full of flawed human characters with problems you can actually relate to; one that takes place in a recognizable world that could even pass for your very own. Crazy, isn't it? I didn't think Hollywood knew how to make movies like that anymore, either.

You can thank Judd Apatow, mastermind behind the beloved, quickly cancelled TV series Freaks and Geeks and Undeclared. Two years ago Apatow scored a surprise, late-summer success with The 40-Year Old Virgin, a beguiling, if overlong and uneven, R-rated comedy that improbably enough turned Steve Carell into a superstar. A similar fate seems likely for Seth Rogen, who stole scenes left and right in Virgin and now takes center stage in Knocked Up, Apatow's extremely satisfying follow-up feature.

Rogen stars as Ben Stone, a dumpy, overweight slacker who seems perfectly content to breeze through life in a cheerful, stoned stupor. He passes the days in a pig pen with four hilarious roommates (a motley assortment of cast members from Apatow's TV shows) breaking wind and occasionally working on an informational Web site cataloging the nude scenes of famous actresses. Ben was lucky enough to get run over by a postal truck as a child, and he's been living off the settlement money ever since.

But one night, the impossible occurs. Our slobbo hero somehow finds himself at a nightclub, hooking up with knockout, recently promoted E! Entertainment Television correspondent Alison Scott (Grey's Anatomy costar Katherine Heigl). While such an occurrence might sound like science fiction, she has been drinking an awful lot and hasn't eaten much thanks to her new job's dietary demands. Besides, Ben's in rare form. He spent the afternoon watching Steven Spielberg's Munich, and he's so jazzed "by a movie in which we Jews finally get to kick some ass" that his confidence is clear off the charts.

One excruciating morning-after breakfast and a quickly discarded phone number later, things would seem to be right back on track for our Alison. That is, until the morning sickness kicks in.

It doesn't take a genius to map out exactly where Knocked Up is headed, as sooner or later Alison will finally figure out the frog she slept with is actually a prince. But Ben will first have to put down the bong and get up off the sofa. The chief pleasures of the film are the bawdy humor and abundant warmth with which Apatow carries his characters to their obvious destination. In case the title didn't tip you off already, this is one terrifically raunchy movie, rife with R-rated banter and a pronounced fascination with bodily functions. Yet a bright core of generosity shines through all the crudity; perhaps not since There's Something About Mary has a comedy so deftly maneuvered between scatology and sweetness.

A lot of this has to do with Rogen's pitch-perfect, star-making performance. Even at his most boorish, Ben remains stubbornly endearing. As befitting the character's perpetual adolescence, Rogen has a wide-eyed, child-like presence, and he exudes a fundamental decency that allows him to get away with some surprisingly harsh moments of acting out. Heigl is almost as impressive, locating the fear bubbling just beneath the farce. These are big decisions the characters are making, and the film takes them seriously.

There's a nice role for Apatow's wife, Leslie Mann, as Alison's brittle sister, a desperate housewife with an increasingly distant husband (Paul Rudd) whose overreaction to her baby sibling's predicament just might be masking some secret anxieties. Rudd proves once again to be a master of the pregnant pause, sometimes stealing entire scenes by saying nothing at all. Though the picture runs a bit long at 132 minutes, such supporting turns are key to the film's grounded, fleshed-out appeal, reminding us that even "happily ever after" takes a heck of a lot of work.

At least one sequence already seems headed for the history books, as Ben picks the exact wrong moment to start worrying what the baby might be seeing during pregnancy sex. Much like the rest of Knocked Up, the scene isn't just funny because it's outrageous; it's funny because it feels like it comes from someplace true. iB

Away From Her ★★★½
You probably wouldn't expect the feature dire debut of 28-year-old actress Sarah Polley to h that explores the quiet cracks of a 44-year ma during the slow, horrific fade of a woman succu to Alzheimer's. You also probably wouldn't expe be this good. Adapted by Polley from Alice M short story "The Bear Went Over The Mour Away From Her takes place in a haunting, Ber esque landscape of cold, wintery light and bar pressed emotions lingering just below the surfac Christie stars as Fiona, disintegrating by the da this nightmarish disease while her husband Gra astounding Gordon Pinsent) is forced to consi beloved to a nursing home. It's a cruel move c Christie as the ailing spouse, as her luminous st sona carries so much baggage that, as was the cas Peter O'Toole in Venus, we in the audience are to confront the aging of our own movie mem The needlessly fractured timeline is a rookie m but otherwise Polley handles this hefty materia dignity and grace. Black Book ★★★½
Fiendishly entertaining and extremely na Paul Verhoeven's Black Book is a rousing, rip- ing adventure told in brightly colored, Golde of Hollywood broad strokes. It's a wild, hamm shamelessly melodramatic and quite shame enjoyable. But just when you're beginning to der if a movie about WWII genocide has any ness being this much fun, the film's wicked l ness leaves an aftertaste. It's impossible to e all the convoluted hairpin twists and turn send our Jewish torch-singer heroine sprintin the arms of the bumbling Dutch resistance from there on Black Book becomes a breath paced roller coaster of double and triple cr bedroom secrets and hidden agendas. The thing you can count on is that you're never than five minutes away from either a sex scen machine gun battle, and you're not going t any idealists on-screen. That the film is such a cious, kicky entertainment feels somehow d certing, almost as if such embittered pess shouldn't be this pleasurable. (At Coolidge C and in the suburbs.)

Blades of Glory ★½
The same initially semi-amusing joke repeated ad tum for a mercifully brief 89 minutes, this choppy be farce pits Will Ferrell's bloated, stupidly macho skater against Jon Heder's dorky, angelic swan of t and then twists the plot backwards into a triple lut ing them to compete in the World Finals as a pa stars throw themselves into various physical com tortions with reckless abandon, but the gags neve beyond that same creepily homophobic Wild Ho tine, wherein we are expected to roar derisively j cause these two dudes look wicked gay. Heder r his Napoleon Dynamite performance right down hand gestures, and Ferrell does the same blockhe undressed alpha-male routine you already rem from Anchorman and Talledega Nights. tro schlock is like a museum installation of crap culture artifacts. Presented as a 42nd Street double feature, complete with phony coming attractions, missing reels and prescratched prints, Grindhouse is 191 minutes of winking postmodern irony and full-tilt movie-geek onanism. Rodriguez's flick comes first, and it's a splattery, chaotic homage to John Carpenter, chock full of zombies, strippers and some breathtakingly bad acting. Personal mileage may vary, but for this reviewer the joke got old before the one-hour mark. Tarantino's snail-paced entry slips into self-parody with endless foul-mouthed chatter and constant close-ups of women's feet. Nobody seems to have told Kurt Russell that this was all a goof, so America's most underrated actor delivers a fully rounded performance of equal parts pathos and dread as a washed-up stunt driver–turned–serial killer. But Tarantino's dialogue is so uncharacteristically wretched and repetitive, not even a late-game, breathlessly staged car chase can counter the pointlessness of the project, or its juvenile, self-indulgent stench. (In the suburbs.)

The Hoax ★★★
With his curly hair and antsy fast-talking pitter-patter, Richard Gere seems to be doing a nifty impression of James Caan in director Lasse Hallstrom's breezy, not-bad romp. Based on the stranger-than-fiction story of failed novelist Clifford Irving and his widely publicized, almost-successful attempt to spin a bogus Howard Hughes autobiography out of whole cloth back in the '70s, The Hoax coasts along on Gere's huckster chutzpah. The plan isn't as outrageous as it might sound, as the reclusive, paranoid Hughes was already so notorious for his bizarre behavior, whatever Irving could invent was bound to pale in comparison with the real deal. There's a lovely supporting turn from Alfred Molina as Gere's sheepish, conscience-stricken research assistant, while Stanley Tucci and Hope Davis work their usual snooty wonders as the suckered publishing executives. William Wheeler's screenplay drifts into a few surreal conceits that the literal-minded Hallstrom can't quite visualize, but otherwise it's a surprisingly nimble little picture, complete with an unexpected alternate angle on the Watergate break-in that left me laughing out loud. (In the suburbs.)

Hot Fuzz ★★★
A cheeky, affectionate British send-up of Hollywood's testosterone-crazed summer action extravaganzas, Hot Fuzz stars cowriter Simon Pegg as a tough-talking, no-nonsense supercop transferred to the sleepy country town of Sandford. Much like these same filmmakers' Shaun of the Dead, Hot Fuzz is a movie made by and for people who've seen way too many movies. The humor lies not in the actual gags, but in the way the flick mimics every stale action-movie trope of the past 15 years, transposing big-gun macho moviemaking techniques from countless urban adventures to a quaint little rural village. It's best viewed as a collection of inside jokes, and buffs can spend hours afterwards pouring over all the little winks, nods and references. Director Edgar Wright has really done his homework here, using just the right syncopated crash-cuts, bombastic hero-worship camera angles and comically overblown explosions. After seeing Hot Fuzz, I doubt it'll be possible to keep a straight face during a Michael Bay movie again, assuming one could ever do so in the first place. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Lives of Others ★★★½
Turns out East Berlin wasn't such a nice place to live in 1984, a year presumably chosen with a wink and a smile by first-time writer-director Florian Henckel Von Donnersmark as the setting for this eerily quiet, breathtakingly suspenseful yarn. Ulrich Muhe delivers a performance of brilliant restraint and control as a ruthless Stasi true believer, suddenly discovering glimmers of a long-dormant conscience when assigned to shadow a fundamentally decent playwright (Powers Boothe look-alike Sebastian Koch) who just might be aiding and abetting some subversive pals during those dark days before the wall came crumbling down. Reminiscent of Francis Ford Coppola's The Conversation, The Lives of Others is all clammy paranoia and creeping dread, with Muhe's poker-faced turn somehow giving you everything and nothing at the same time. It's riveting stuff, watching a man discover just how badly his ideals have been twisted and perverted by power-mongering thugs in high places; enough to carry you through this otherwise crisp, understated picture's weird determination to offer more false endings than The Return of the King. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Lucky You ★★★
Abandoned for dead after two years on the shelf, Curtis Hanson's shambling, minor-key Las Vegas lark deserved a better deal than the studio's quiet burial beneath the Spider-Man juggernaut. A loosey-goosey low-stakes tale of father-son rivalry in the tradition of Sam Peckinpah's Junior Bonner, Lucky

You stars Eric Bana as a scrappy professional poker player who can't quite keep his chips together whenever his crotchety old man (the great Robert Duvall) turns up to call his bluff. In recent years, Hanson's become a journeyman director in the Old Hollywood tradition, drifting from film noir (L.A. Confidential) to the modern musical (8 Mile) to the chick flick (In Her Shoes), bringing no baggage save for strict professionalism and a sharp sense of where his characters live; few filmmakers get even half as much out of location shooting. Bana's obligatory romantic subplot with Drew Barrymore is a bit of a nonstarter, but watch for lovely supporting turns from Robert Downey Jr. and Jean Smart. Full of life around the margins, it's an unhurried little charmer. (In the suburbs.)

The Namesake ★★

Movies aren't novels, an inconvenient truth that apparently escaped gifted Mira Nair, who directed this well-intentioned, borderline interminable adaptation of Jhumpa Lahiri's bestseller. Forced to winnow down a dense, unwieldy 30 years' worth of trials and tribulations faced by a family of Bengali immigrants, Nair opts for the greatest hits approach—summarizing several lifetimes in rapid-fire shorthand. Kal Penn, of Harold and Kumar Go to White Castle fame, stars as the stubborn, ungrateful son, rediscovering his cultural heritage only during his darkest moments of adversity. Drifting almost aimlessly through the decades, Nair's stumblebum reworking not only transplants Lahiri's story from Boston to Manhattan, but also feels more like a rushed collection of half-realized scenes, with her typical keenly observed behavioral details clanging against all sorts of hasty exposition and time-lapse dissolves. Books can afford to linger, ramble and digress, but the best films by and large tend to exist on short clocks and clear objectives, concepts anathema to The Namesake's pig-pile of haphazard incident and epic sprawl. (At Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Spider-Man 3 ★★

The received wisdom in Hollywood about sequels is that bigger is always better, which might be true if you're making pictures based on Disney theme-park rides, but such massively scaled productions seldom allow for the awkward little grace notes of humanity that have thus far personified Sam Raimi's Spider-Man series. Boasting no less than three deadly supervillians and an endlessly convoluted plot, Spider-Man 3 doesn't need a director, it needs a traffic cop. The screenwriters, including Raimi, his brother Ivan and Oscar-winner Alvin Sargent, eventually find themselves buried under so much exposition, Peter Parker has to watch a recap of the film's second act on the TV news. Honestly folks, if you need to summarize about an hour's worth of plot mechanics by having your hero tune into CNN, then there isn't going to be room for the wit and humor of those two earlier movies. Spider-Man 3 proves that sometimes more is a heckuva lot less. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Fresh Pond and in the suburbs.)

Steel City ★★★

Initially ponderous, first-time writer-director Brian Jun's somber family drama takes place in a bleak Southern Illinois landscape of run-down mills and beat-up trucks, where every shot looks like the cover of Springsteen's Nebraska album. Mystic River's Tom Guiry carries the weight of the world on his shoulders as his Dad (John Heard) preps for a lengthy prison sentence, and the rest of the family turns a blind eye to his troubles. But stick with it, as things pick up considerably upon the arrival of Raymond J. Barry's estranged Uncle Vic, a plainspoken, no-nonsense loner with a twinkle in his eyes that hints at a thousand long-buried family secrets. Jun's terse, elliptical cutting leaves you guessing, a tactic that compliments the close-to-the-vest mystery imbued in both Barry and Heard's marvelously understated performances. Getting better as it goes along, the movie finally finds these characters slouching towards a gruff sort of redemption, one that's all the more powerful for what remains unsaid. (At Kendall Square.)

28 Weeks Later ★★★

This cracklingly nasty and politically pointed follow-up to Danny Boyle's 2002 shocker 28 Days Later kicks off six months after Britain was ravaged by a killer virus that turned the infected into super-speedy, flesh-munching zombies. Director Juan Carlos Fresnadillo takes the helm this time around, detailing the ill-fated U.S.-led reconstruction effort. Faster than you can say, "mission accomplished," the disease comes roaring back through "the green zone," and underfunded grunts find themselves in a quagmire, fighting a whole new kind of urban warfare. Subtle, the film is not. But despite a few regrettable lapses in logic, 28 Weeks Later has a malicious sense of urgency and a bracing hopelessness. Trainspotting's Robert Carlyle heads the cast as a devoted dad who lost his nerve at the wrong moment, and Fresnadillo helms some genuinely harrowing set pieces, including one underground nightvision doozy and a firebombing of almost operatic despair. The best zombie pictures have always used the undead as a pretext for social commentary, and it's heartening to see one as plugged-in and pissed-off as this. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Zoo ★

Formalism runs amok in this vague, exasperating documentary, which purports to be about a secret subculture of men who like to have sex with horses. Too bad the real focus of the film is director Robinson Devor's precocious virtuosity, and his rather annoying affinity for glossy visual curlicues and hypnotic sound cues. Narrated in hushed tones with the true confessions of online bestiality aficionados, the insufferable Zoo dawdles around its topic, playing coy in an overaestheticized haze of artsy-fartsy confusion. Yes, it's true that in 2005, a Seattle businessman died from a perforated colon after a barnyard tryst with an Arabian stallion, but you'll learn more about the story from a 30-second Google search than you will from all 75 minutes of Devor's meandering. I presume the carefully underlit reenactments of banal day-to-day activities are supposed to make us empathize with the zoophiles, but they just gave me an urge to puncture the reverent church-silence by humming the theme song to Mr. Ed. (At Coolidge Corner.)

Freddie Prinze Jr., Jerry Ferrara and Scott Caan pass the time in Brooklyn Rules.

Putting on the Dog

Skinny Puppy retools its edgy industrial-rock legacy.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Subtlety isn't a word generally applied to a Skinny Puppy concert. The Canadian industrial-rock pioneers are better-known for lurid videos of animal experiments and frontman Nivek Ogre donning fake blood and demon masks. On its last tour, the band even staged a mock Taliban-style beheading.

Yet subtlety is a word that Ogre (born Kevin Ogilvie) uses to describe the show headed for Avalon June 7. "There's a bit more subtlety to what's going on," he says from his LA home between rehearsals. "It's not so in-your-face."

Skinny Puppy's cEvin Key and Nivek Ogre perform on the edge.

So video footage will be more abstract and interpretive ("more like shadows on the wall"), Ogre says, although he won't completely abandon such onstage rituals as wearing masks or caking himself in blood, dirt or chalkdust.

"It becomes some sort of conditioning experiment, like Pavlov's dog," Ogre says. "Not liking the feeling of sticky things on you—that's one aspect [of the past] that made me want to change to a certain degree. And the other thing is just trying to open up different avenues to express the same type of emotions, without doing what people expect."

For 25 years, after all, Ogre and his Puppy co-conspirator and electronics blacksmith cEvin Key (born Kevin Crompton) have pushed the envelope to expected extremes—and not only with their music. In 1988, they were arrested for disorderly conduct after a Cincinnati show where police pursued a complaint that they vivisected a dog onstage. The irony was that they were animal-rights activists with a toy prop. And Ogre and Key have long been vehement critics of military operations in Iraq; Skinny Puppy's 2005 concert DVD The Greater Wrong of the Right Live included a bonus disc with interviews of veterans from the first Gulf War.

But Ogre says he now thinks the public has grown overloaded and desensitized. "To try and rise above all that with some sort of spectacle in these times is pretty hard," he says. "What I'm trying to do is kind of sneak underneath all of that and explore the idea of personal privacy in these times, when we feel safest at home, and sometimes I don't think we are [safe], and personal privacy is an illusion."

Skinny Puppy's new CD Mythmaker also explores manipulative relationships and issues of control. But Ogre says they're balancing that material with older songs that have never been played before.

The group can certainly claim a fervent fan base, even if it's not as large as those of Nine Inch Nails and Marilyn Manson, who both took musical and visual cues from Skinny Puppy—and found commercial success in the process. "We were a little too on-the-edge for some people," says Ogre, noting that the one thing that rankles him is a doll that immortalizes Marilyn Manson on stilts—a stage gambit that the Skinny Puppy frontman developed first.

"We're the Syd Barretts of industrial music," says Ogre, referring to the mad genius who co-founded Pink Floyd and then became a recluse. "We've been lucky to have a career out of this. I certainly don't make the millions of dollars that Trent Reznor does [with Nine Inch Nails]. Not even close. We're struggling year to year. But at the same time, it's been an amazing experience."

And it's an experience that continues to amaze. Skinny Puppy formed in Vancouver in 1982, but fell apart in 1995 when Ogre quit and keyboardist Dwayne Goettel died from a heroin overdose. After a reunion show in 2000, Ogre and Key made 2003's The Greater Wrong of the Right (with Tool's Danny Carey among others) and secured new life.

"It's like history—you realize that with everything else you do, it's arterial in a way, it goes to the heart," says Ogre, 44. "There's something that keeps us coming back to Skinny Puppy. It's either a way of venting our personal demons or feeling useful within a neglectful society."

Today's Puppy has revived a more electronic, beat-driven sound, with only drummer Justin Bennett returning to assist Ogre and Key on the road. While Ogre says that Mythmaker contains "Probably some of the best vocal work I've done in my life," he's billed as an "oral impressionist" for his adoption of distorting effects such as a vocorder and ring modulator, sonic shape-shifting he transfers to the stage.

"I've always been a character voice," he says. "It is a bit of a Wizard of Oz scenario: 'Pay no attention to that man behind the curtain.' There's that aspect to the character, that vulnerability, and maybe that's what ultimately has appealed to people.

"There's still a character being created onstage, going through the various pitfalls," Ogre says, adding of the current show, "It'll hopefully still be a spectacle." IB

rockie horoscope

MAY 30 – JUNE 12, 2007 BY ROCKIE GARDIN

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

One of the advantages of being an up-to-date, well-connected Gemini is getting a taste from your Mercury ruler of what's going on a week or so before the sun confirms your suspicions. This perk could be particularly useful as you prepare to celebrate yet another birthday. Right about now it might help to know that, instead of its typical three-week sojourn, Mercury will meander through your Cancer house of assets until Aug. 4, long after the sun has finished its transit. If a money matter can't be resolved quickly, that may be why.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

Mercury's upcoming retrograde (June 15-July 9) will affect everyone, but because it occurs in their sign, Moon Children should prepare themselves for the ensuing snafus. Starting on Memorial Day, remind yourself to keep track of all the paperwork—e.g., messages, notes, receipts, confirmation codes—that'll pile up before Mercury exits on Aug. 4. If the shit does fly, those scraps could be your first line of defense. But at the moment, the full moon in your work zone points to a bigger, more prestigious assignment than you anticipated.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST

Not quite as rare as a blue moon, but not frequent enough to take for granted. What is it? The full moon on May 31 in your Sagittarius house of romance and re-creation, an annual phenomenon reinforcing your belief that summer should be dedicated to having fun. Verify your plans fairly soon, before Mercury turns retrograde, mixes up reservations and misplaces tickets. To help put and keep you in the mood for love, Venus will be in Leo from the first week in June until mid-July. Need more spending money? Apply by the 5th.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

At the moment the Virgin may be riding the crest of a wave bound for shore, one that'll get you there eventually. But because your Mercury ruler is cruising through cautious Cancer for the next 10 weeks, you might want to have water wings on hand to keep you afloat in the interim. Mercury's three-week retrograde trip down memory lane occurs in the area of your chart where colleagues, social circles and political groups congregate. Despite impending delays, misunderstandings and revisions, you'd best go with the flow.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

As long as friendly overtures are still being extended—i.e., as long as your Venus ruler is in your Cancer midheaven—accept them. Although some invitations may come with an unwritten set of rules or conflict with another date, it doesn't matter. Once Venus enters Leo on June 5, the aftermath of attending these events can be more rewarding and more entertaining than expected. Meanwhile your partner, instead of shooting from the hip, might be methodically lining up influential backing for your project. Good deal.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

The pressure to reach a decision about a nebulous situation at home should abate now that Neptune is retrograde. With one less thing to worry about, concentrate for the next few weeks on getting a moneymaking enterprise off the ground. It's been decades since your energetic Mars coruler was favorably aligned with generous Jupiter in your Sag house of assets as well as the power structure represented by Saturn in Leo at the top of your chart. So please, don't scorn the benefits offered during this rare Grand Fire Trine.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

A Blue Moon is a special occasion, no matter when or in which sign it occurs. But since that sign is Sagittarius, you might feel compelled by the cosmos to celebrate the event: Thursday, May 31, preferably after work but before bedtime. If the Centaur is truly the party animal it purports to be, you'll keep the celebration going over the weekend or u the Gemini sun illuminates your traits as well as your dubious talents. It'll also oppose your wise-cracking Jup ruler on June 5. These are the high times, friend. Enjoy.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

If patience is the key to heaven, then Caps who manage endure Mercury's long and winding road trip through th Cancer-complement should consider getting fitted for th wings. Memorial Day marks the beginning of the transit Aug. 4, the end. In between these dates, you'll be asked follow the tortuous path of assertions, retractions and corrections that a partner will lead you on. Accomplish with grace, wit and equanimity, and you could be rewar in mid-August by your well-compensated Saturn ruler.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

In their own inimitable way, all signs will have to deal w Mercury turning retrograde in mid-June, but because th flip-out occurs in Cancer, in Aquarians' house of work, and household pets, they should take the necessary precautions now. Make sure that Spot gets his shots, an there's a problem with a coworker or the union, try to resolve it before the long retrogression turns into the en summer. Remember, however, to take time to enjoy the blessings and beauty Venus brings while she occupies yo marriage house.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Blue moons are significant enough events, but when th take place at the top of your chart, in your Sagittarius house of achievement, you really should pay attention what happens on May 31 and over the next few days. Although it's easy to pooh-pooh the importance of this particular phenomenon, it's not so easy to live up to its expectations. This week is when you may realize what having the moon (representing the public) in your midheaven implies and how public opinion can influen decision about your career.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

Just how blissful domestic bliss will be depends on what happens while Mercury is in Cancer, the sign in which yo family tree took root. Rams have until early August, whi when the Messenger moves on to Leo, to track the development of an issue raised by a relative and resolve But for the time being, good news delivered around the Moon on the 31st could become the justification for exte your vacation or adding more dates to your summer tou Not to mention having a lot more fun and money, too.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Your concern about a current career matter may seem l it's already been tabled. That's because idealistic Neptu nebulous at best, is in retrograde and won't face forwa again until Halloween. Between now and then would be excellent time to retrieve a project, the more visual the better, that's been filed away and see if its time has fin come. Relevance is relative; what failed to float when fi introduced might gather momentum while Mercury, th communicator, drifts back and forth through Cancer fo next 10 weeks.

Big Bang

You came out of Jensen's dry cleaners in Needham at 2:55 pm on May 5 driving a maroon Lexus 300. You hung your precious clothes that your husband probably paid for in the back of your precious Lexus, and then proceeded to put your car in reverse. But did you even bother to look? No. You just banged right into my car; not a tap, but a BANG. Now, I grew up in the suburbs (one with nicer people than you!) and was raised to know that you should at least look in the rearview mirror to see what's behind you. And when it's a car with someone sitting in it, you might want to get out and investigate, right? No, prima donnas in their Lexus just drive right off, probably to their manicure. Fortunately, my Volvo is fine, and I'm happy to be back in Boston. Next time I see you, I am beeping and giving you the finger, which I thought would be inappropriate in Needham, but apparently is well-deserved in your case. You are a stupid B. Oh, and I have your plate number.
—Owner of the Nice Red Volvo

Animal Farm

Mommy Dearest: Since when did your pets replace your children? I love animals, too, but you take it to a whole new level. You won't even buy food for your college-student daughter, who lives at home, but you'll buy a whole chicken and feed all of it to four animals? And you still can't see that two of the four are total brats. They get away with everything because you just can't say no to their cute little faces. That's why the cat won't keep out of people's faces when they're trying to eat. It's why the dog tears up the carpet and rips doors apart whenever you put it in another room. Not to mention the two younger cats who starve while the older cat gets premium Fancy Feast venison for dinner. No wonder the dog has an intense case of separation anxiety. You're crazy. Your pets are crazy. Your daughter is going crazy because you ignore her and coddle the damn cat. Get your priorities straight. Remember, your daughter will be picking a nursing home for you someday—not your cat!
—Just an Observer

Family Values

To my family: Thank you for everything you've done for me. I can't believe graduation came so soon. I feel like I just arrived in Boston and now it's over! You've been so supportive and loving through these four years, and I couldn't have done it without you. I dedicate all of my past and future successes to you. You're my best friends and my soul mates. Also, I'm sorry about all the parking tickets.
—Your Daughter

Don't Be Cruel to a Heart That's True

Honey, I know you don't mean it, but how can you be so clueless? I mean, seriously. Do you really think no one has you figured out? You hide behind that fake smile and laugh, but it's not happening. The facade isn't working. For anyone. We all see it. Those who have the ability to, that is. Your cronies, nah, they don't. And never will. They worship you and want to be you. And have the same effed up values you do. So, you can hide behind that blissful, breezy, je ne sais quoi attitude you try to pull off. You can pretend to have a heart and soul that really cares. You can try to shed a light on the world, if that's what you think you're doing. But those who know you or of you, who have a heart and soul, know it's all bullshit. So just keep on going. Someday, karma will catch up. I just hope you're ready.
—Feeling Sorry for You

Hearts and Flowers

I'm so sorry that I haven't been myself lately and have been totally unsupportive. I'm going through a lot right now. But I know you're maybe going though more. Just know that I'm here for you—and always will be. We'll get through these tough times. I know we will. With strength, courage and a whole lot of love and support, I know things will begin to take off for us soon.

Captain Joe Crawford, engineer Jack Snodgrass and copilot Mark Deckwitz posed with us en route to Nagoya, Japan. Guys, how about next time one of you keeps an eye on the sky?

On a recent trip to Iceland, Tim Perry and Jacob Landeros visited "The Sun Voyager," a sculpture by Jón Gunnar Árnason—Reykjavik's answer to John Cougar Mellencamp.

Elizabeth Reed was all smiles in front of the Thousand Buddha Mountain in Jinan, China. It looks like only one big fat Buddha to us, but maybe it took, like, a thousand Buddhas to build it.

Christine and Jeff Haskin (holding magazine) got hitched in Puerto Morelos, Mexico, but only after Jeff got down on one knee and said, "Christine, I'm Haskin you to marry me."

Along with a mighty old sun burn, Chris Aghazadi also picked up this fancy pair of red parrot earmu while vacationing in Cancun, Mexico.

RESTAURANTS

BROWNSTONE 111 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142 www..irishconnection.com. Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and the elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features creative, comfort cuisine. Favorites include the chicken lollipops, tartare trio, short rib pot roast and pan seared haddock. On weekends, Chef Michael McEwen turns out "late-night" cuisine until 1:30 a.m., featuring midnight snacks of fritto misto, baked fondue and pancakes and eggs from the brunch menu. Brownstone is open seven days a week from 11 a.m. – 2 a.m., serving brunch on Saturday and Sunday from 10 a.m. – 3 p.m.

CACTUS CLUB 939 Boylston St., 617-236-0200. Have the notorious Cactus margarita, voted Boston's Best 6 years in a row! Our southwestern specialties include Sizlin' Fajitas, Chimichangas, or Quesadillas and the daring wash it all down with a Cactus Bowl. Open daily for lunch and dinner. READING IS FUNDAMENTAL...

It's a good thing the Boston area has a seemingly endless supply of prominent and distinguished authors, since the Associates of the Boston Public Library honor a group of them annually at their elegant and edifying Literary Lights Dinner at the Park Plaza.

The mix of literati and glitterati included keynote speaker Roy Blount Jr., past and present honorees such as Israel Horovitz, Christopher Lydon, Chet Raymo, Niall Ferguson, Robert Campbell, William Martin and Philip Caputo, mega-philanthropists Stephen Kaye and Liz Tylo, Vernon Alden, Hod and Cassandra Irvine, and Suki and Miguel de Braganca, MFA jefe Malcolm Rogers, and über–library booster Vivian Spiro with her husband, Lionel, and daughters Laura and Julia.

It's a toss-up as to what constituted the evening's highlight: the $50,000 pledged by honoree Patricia Cornwell to support conservation of the library's special collections or the highly amusing remarks by keynote speaker Blount ("On the rejection of publication of his new book, did O.J. Simpson get a kill fee?").

Other witticisms overheard before everyone attacked the stacks of books that served as centerpieces and then headed for home:

"I consider myself a nonprofit. It's not what I planned, but it's how things turned out," and one woman who observed, in somewhat questionable taste, "This event is really a two-fer, because you're not only supporting the library but the homeless people who live on the grates outside."

A PARTY ABOUT NOTHING...

There was a certain Seinfeld quality to the Spotlight Spectacular gala at the Westin Waterfront, thanks to BU alum Jason Alexander, who joined TV stars Victor Garber and Michael T. Weiss to help the Huntington Theatre celebrate its 25th anniversary.

Also on hand were such bold-faced names as event chairs Kristine and Davey Scoon, honorees Sherryl and Gerard Cohen, arts boosters Michelle and Steve Karol, Judi and Douglas Krupp, David and Betsy Epstein, and Linda and Dan Waintrup, force of nature Rosalie Cohen, party planner nonpareil Bryan Rafanelli, Bob "Dunkin Donuts" Rosenberg and the ethereal Mary Woolfson, the superchic Nan Weatherhorn and the deliciously named Fancy Zilberfarb, to name a few. However, two of the more colorful characters had to be French fashion plate Yvonne Madnick and her husband, Stuart, an MIT professor who owns a 13th-century castle in England and recently bought back the title that goes with it. But while he may be entitled to call himself a baron, he's not the sort to take anything too seriously—for example, when asked, "Where are you originally from?" he answered, "Out West. And by that, I mean Worcester."

JIMMY CHOO, WHERE ARE YOU?

Operating on the assumption that (a) corporate big shots know how to read and (b) having them read to school kids will improve the children's chances of excelling academically, Boston Partners in Education hosted its third annual Big Cheese Reads gala at the World Trade Center.

Present and accounted for: State Street honcho Ronald Logue, the dapper Anand Vaishnav and Anthony Smith, novelist, professor and gala cochair Kim McLarin, and beautiful blonde board member Meg Jordan (with her husband, Jerry), who explained that one of the many advantages of being married to an improbably tall man is that "I don't have to worry if my heels are too high."

WELL, AT LEAST IT BEATS PITTSFIELD...

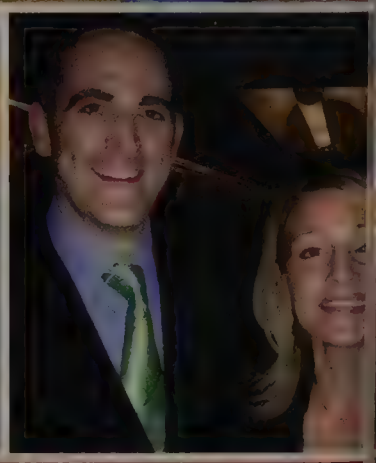
They say that living well is the best revenge. If that's true, the Boston Living Center has done an excellent job for more than 16 years helping people with HIV and AIDS exact a bit of revenge on their illnesses. To celebrate the organization's achievements, they held their Living to Dream gala at the Back Bay Events Center.

On hand for the awards dinner and performance by Coro Allegro were such notables as honoree Jeffrey Gates and his scrumptious wife, Jennifer, Channel 7 stud-muffin Randy Price, dapper restaurateur Jason Babb, PR czar Phil Nardone and his other half, Scott Peltier, political powerhouse Nan Dumas, Tufts Dental School demigod Joe Castellana, fashion plate extraordinaire Susan Kaplan, dashing antiques dealer Marc Glasberg, restaurateurs Chris Myers and Esti Benson, and Gary and Michael Hammschmidt-Groth.

Among the witticisms overheard:

The gay couple who said, "We have a year-old son... which is funny, because w only been married for three weeks," and man who said, "We're planning to do pride in Marblehead," to which someone sponded, "I'm sure it will be very tasteful

However, the most amusing rem came from Mayor Menino, when he as a friend why he was leaving before dinn



"I have an early flight to my idea of l Palm Beach."

"Tough life," said the mayor. "Tomo I gotta go to Chelsea." IB

FROM THE EDITOR

SWEET, SAVORY SUMMER

No doubt about it, this issue's cover boy, Ken Oringer, is creating some of the most exciting food in Boston. What's more, there's more of it. Oringer has nearly doubled his family of restaurants this spring, adding taco joint La Verdad and hip steakhouse KO Prime to his existing Clio (turning 10 this year), Uni and Toro.

Behind all that hard work is the real thing: the talent that has earned him critical acclaim (including the James Beard Award for best chef in the Northeast) and an absolute passion for food that comes through the minute you start talking to him about his favorite topic.

In this issue we invite you to go into Ken's kitchens with writer Ruth Tobias, who spent a day with the chef just as his two new ventures launched, virtually simultaneously. The natural follow-up is, of course, a visit to those restaurants to taste the results for yourself.

FRANK TALK

Your Summer Fun issue discusses ways that Fenway vendors and caterers are looking to improve their food (Dish, May 30). However, as a Massachusetts girl, born and raised, I can tell you when a Red Sox fan, or any Bostonian for that matter, ventures through the golden gates of Fenway Park looking to sink their teeth into a luscious, juicy, mouth-watering Fenway Frank, they aren't looking for change. When that Fenway worker walks around the bleachers shouting,"Get your Fenway Franks!" the Red Sox fans know that they can count on that vendor to deliver the best hot dog they've ever tasted. So I ask you Fenway vendors and caterers, please don't do anything to change any of your food. I fully disagree with the first sentence of the column, which states, "Nobody comes to the park expecting to find anything decent—or even decently priced—to eat." Yes, we recognize that these Franks are a rip-off, but even calorie counters can't resist sinking their teeth into the beloved Fenway Frank.

Antonio Veneziano

Rice balls

The Real Deal

This guy is too good to be true. "It's-a very simple," Antonio Veneziano says, Italian accent seasoning his English the way garlic seasons his food. Swathed in a marinara-stained apron, Veneziano points to a menu item. "It's cold cuts," he says, throwing up his arms and shrugging. "But the best cold cuts from Italy!" He should know, being from there and all.

Which means antipasto ($11) isn't the only authentic import at Salvatore's, the first Boston outpost from the brothers behind Sal's, a chain of popular pizza joints with more than 30 locations in Massachusetts and New Hampshire. They stumbled upon Veneziano through a friend, who was taking a cooking class with him at the time. He seemed like the perfect consulting chef, happy to share his secrets, having closed his own restaurant years before.

"And then he came in and never left," one of the owners, Nick Lupoli, sums up. It's-a very simple.

So is the story behind Salvatore's. Mayor Tom Menino approached the family about opening on the South Boston waterfront. They saw an opportunity—"In a few years, this is going to be the place to be," Lupoli explains—and developer Joseph Fallon helped make it a reality.

Unlike Sal's (named for the founding bro), the new restaurant is upscale, following a sister spot in Lawrence, Mass. The recipe is similar to the rest, though: fresh, uncomplicated ingredients. "You don't need a dictionary to eat," Veneziano says. The food is "beautiful, classic."

All the usual suspects are there—chicken and veal parmesan, chicken and veal marsala, chicken and veal piccata ($18 and $23)—you get the picture. A fresh tomato sauce dresses the parmesan, as well as other Italian staples, including cheese pizzas like a Sal's special, the 19-inch triple-pounder ($12). Don't be alarmed: That's as big as it gets. Veneziano "thinks it's too much," Lupoli says of the portions at Sal's. "We'll have good size," he responds. Just "not too much. I can't allow it. Boston is not Lawrence."

The surroundings prove the point. Salvatore's opens onto a 24-seat bar, where white lacquer boxes, suspended from the ceiling, display liquor bottles. Nary a red-and-white checked tablecloth is to be found in the 95-person dining room, decorated in shades of beige and rust. A wall of windows looks onto a soon-to-be-stylish patio if neighbor LTK is any indicator.

Back in the kitchen, Veneziano mans the stove. He grabs a bottle of olive oil. Make that "good olive oil. You can tell from the color." He tosses in garlic, hot pepper, cherry tomatoes, parsley, then ladles in some marinara. Lastly, in goes the Italian pasta. Beautiful, classic. Salvatore's, 225 Northern Ave., Boston (617-737-7257). —Megan Lisagor

INNER VIEW

Philanthropic Flutie

In these antimonarchical times, Doug Flutie is about th closest thing we have to royalty here in Boston. Since retir ing from the NFL in 2006, the BC legend and drop-kick king has focused his energies on the Doug Flutie Jr. Foun dation, which helps families facing childhood autism. We caught up with Flutie, whose son has the developmenta disorder, as he prepared for his annual Celebrity Golf Clas sic on June 18 and 19. For more info call 866-3-AUTISM.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: So how does the foundation hel fight autism?

Doug Flutie: We give a small percentage to research, w really try to focus on the families. The money goes to thing like camps for kids, one-on-one services, computers, etc.

IB: What can we expect from the golf classic?

DF: We play 36 holes down at Pinehills in Plymouth an spread it out so everyone can play at their own pace. An the party the night before [at the Hyatt Boston] is a lot fun. My band plays, and in the past we've had guys fro Aerosmith, J. Geils Band and Boston all come down. It a ways turns into a Boston-area jam.

IB: Let's talk dirt. Among the professional athletes you' played golf with, who's the best?

DF: Drew Brees is the best football player I've played wit and there was this quarterback named Billy Joe Tolliver played with once in a tournament. I was like, "Man, this gu must not be spending enough time playing football."

IB: Who's the worst? And you can't say Charles Barkle He doesn't count.

DF: Well, if you see me play on the wrong day, it could l me. Last year I played a round with Patriots backup cent Billy Yates. It was his first time playing and it was ugly.

IB: How 'bout those Pats?

DF: They've positioned themselves to have a good chanc I've been there, so I know there are no layups in the NF but they should be good. I'm very excited for Tom [Brad IB: Lastly, rank these events in order of greatness: the H Mary, the drop kick and that foul ball you caught at the Yankees-Sox game a couple years ago.

DF: [Laughs.] Well, the drop kick was the most fun, the Hail Mary will be the most remembered and the foul ball the most ridiculous. I say that because it was actually the fourth straight Red Sox game that I caught a foul ball. —Rich Levine

TASTY TIDBITS

On Burgers and Brothers

Nuts for Natick… When did Natick get so cool? Last month, we reported that French eatery Sel de la Terre would be opening another location in the newly renovated Natick Mall, and now we have news that the Met Club is headed there as well. Slated to open in September, the restaurant will seat about 200 patrons and deliver the same upscale, steakhouse feel as its Chestnut Hill location, with one very notable addition: a burger bar. The bar will feature a vertical grill, used to enhance the flavor of the meat. Guests can choose from an array of sauces and toppings, including kimchi, pepperdews, shiatsu peppers, truffle oil and pan-seared foie gras. www.metclubandbar.com.

The Met Club's miniburgers

Scarlet Fever… The former home of Hingham's Blackfin Chophouse, a 250-year-old building on Main Street, is set to reopen this month as the Scarlet Oak Tavern. Brothers Jed and Josh Webber will run the 110-seat spot, introducing a comfort food–heavy menu—think meatloaf and shepherd's pie—courtesy of chef KC O'Hara, formerly of East Coast Grill and Sonsie. The Webbers have made major renovations to the storied space, making it the oldest thing in town to undergo reconstruction since Tommy Heinsohn's hip replacement. 1217 Main St., Hingham (781-749-8200). www.scarletoaktavern.com.

Get Grilling… Nothing like a good reason to bypass the dreaded Pru food court. First, PF Chang's opened in the mall this spring. And next year, the Daily Grill—a chain with more than 20 locations nationwide—will provide another dining destination. The Grill will take over the 6,700-square-foot space left by Applebee's and should start feeding the shopping masses by the first half of 2008. Serving lunch and dinner, the restaurant will offer a modern American menu, featuring dishes made with fresh ingredients that are purchased daily… hence, the Daily Grill. We also hear they have killer cheese during happy hour. www.dailygrill.com.

He's No Heel… As chef/owner of the French eatery Lumière in Newton, Michael Leviton has earned his share of accolades, including being tagged as Food & Wine's Best New Chef in America in 2000. This fall he's branching out from the suburbs and into the city—but will Boston be Leviton's Achilles' heel? Only in name, we suspect. Achilles is the New American restaurant Leviton (along with partners Michael Krupp and Shaka Ramsey) is opening this October at Fort Point Channel. The spot will be both boutique—selling exclusive products and high-end fashion—and eatery, serving modern American food. It's a change from the French fare that made Lumière a hit, but somehow we're not worried. www.lumiererestaurant.com. —RL

BEAUTY BUZZ

Saving Face

The North End cleans up well. And it's gotten a whole lot prettier, thanks to Paul Tierney, proprietor of the new beauty boutique A Matter of Face. Tipped off about the space by another trendy North End shop owner, Tierney decided to relocate from Newburyport, where she co-owned beauty boutique Be Pink. To her new store she's brought along her favorite lines of makeup and skincare products, including cosmetics by fashionista fave Paula Dorf; a unisex clinical skincare line, Peter Thomas Roth; and two of-the-moment mineral makeup lines, Susan Posnick and Alison Raffaele. Positioning itself as more than your basic boutique, the shop offers Girls' Nights Out ($40), when Tierney will happily give makeovers (she's a makeup artist, too). She also does lash extensions one night per week by appointment, and hosts in-store events at least once a month—on June 30, a skincare specialist from Caudalíe, an all-natural French line, will provide mini in-chair facials, for example. Finally, the perfect shade of lipstick is just as easy to come by as a cannoli. A Matter of Face, 425 Hanover St., Boston (617-74-BLUSH). www.amatterofface.com.

HOLE IN THE WATER

Boats are a huge pain and a royal waste of money. I can't wait to get one and give it a name.

I have a problem. Every now and then, I seize on an idea and I can't let it go, and these ideas always involve spending money. I wish these obsessions would manifest themselves as a need to buy long-term stocks or pay down our mortgage, but my brain doesn't work that way. In many ways, my brain hasn't changed much since I was 15 (just ask me about the trespassing ticket I got recently after rocking an awesome burnout on a private road). Fifteen-year-olds want toys. And I want a boat.

I don't know how this started. A few months ago, I was saying sensible things like, "The best kind of boat is someone else's." Then the weather warmed up. I started seeing boats puttering past Castle Island, and the next thing I knew I was on eBay danger-bidding on a repossessed center-console somewhere in Florida.

I should know better. We had a boat growing up—a 21-foot lobster boat. It made the front page of the local newspaper when it sunk on its mooring and had to be dragged out of the harbor by the fire department. Another time, the propeller spun off in the middle of Boothbay Harbor. And then there were a few occasions when really bad things happened.

But you know what? Those aren't the memories that stick with me so much as all the fun I had with that thing—fishing, anchoring at a beach for a barbecue, pulling my friend Morrill on water skis just off Pemaquid Beach. You don't see people waterskiing in the ocean behind a lobster boat very often, and it turns out there's a reason for that.

I think my boat fascination has to do with living in the Northeast. When summer is so short, you feel the need to squeeze every ounce of fun out of it. And besides, do you have any idea how hard it is to resist bidding on a boat named "Stay Classy"? "Poundin' Suds," a Craigslist find, looked pretty sweet, too.

That's another fantastic thing about boats—you get to give them a name, preferably one involving your profession and a bad pun on the word "sea." A health professional like an optometrist could go with "Sea Saw"; an obstetrician, "Sea Section"; and if you're Dr. 90210, "Sea Cups."

As a writer, I'm not sure which way I'd go—you'd need a pretty wide boat to fit "I Before E Except After Sea." Or, I could adopt my dad's strategy: He named his boat "Ann Marie," after my mom. Because how much can a woman despise a vessel with her name on it? He's crafty, my dad.

This brings me to a funny thing I noticed about the Craigslist boat listings—a lot of them include the word "divorce" in the title. When I broached the idea of a boat with Heather, I began to understand why.

When I asked Heather what kind of boat she likes, she said, "Whatever the cheapest kind is." I suppose this is because when she was growing up, her family owned a sailboat, and sailboats are stupid. They're supposed to represent some kind of romantic ideal of travel from a bygone era, yet sailboats often have a pathetic little motor. I say, if you're gonna go old-school with your boating, go all the way and get a sailboat with no engine at all. Sailing with a motor is like riding a horse with a go-kart strapped to its belly. Granted, riding a horse in the first place is pretty pointless.

DO YOU HAVE ANY IDEA HOW HARD IT IS TO RESIST BIDDING ON A BOAT NAMED "STAY CLASSY"?

So I don't have a boat yet, but it seems inevitable. I went and looked at one last night, and, unbeknownst to Heather, had the money for it in my pocket. Looking for someone to talk me down off the ledge, I sent my friend Whits a link to a boat for sale down in Maryland. It doesn't have a trailer or seats, and it needs a starter. Obviously, it has "bad idea" written all over it. Whits summed up the situation thus: "I think it doesn't make one bit of sense… for you not to buy that boat right now. Come on. We can go get it tomorrow. After you find a trailer somewhere." I can always count on Whits to provide a voice of reason.

As for Heather, I'm sure she'll see the light sooner or later and realize that a boat is the cherry on top of a fun-summer sundae. But obviously, I can't really convince her of that myself. I think that's gonna be a job for the S.S. Heather Michelle. IB

AL(L) IS NOT LOST

I'm betting on the big guy.

Your Boston Celtics finally grabbed some headlines this season. Of course, it was predicated on their losing. They lost a lot. But they were lovable losers, finishing with the second-worst record in the league, especially considering the reward that was supposed to follow: Greg Oden, aka The Next Bill Russell.

And even if Oden fell through, we had a nice consolation prize waiting in Kevin Durant. Yeah, everyone knew it: One pick would change everything that ails this legendary franchise.

But it never happened. There was no cigar. There was no pomp and circumstance. And there was no run on season tickets. (Word out of Portland had 2,000 fans buying a season package within two days of the announcement that the Blazers had won the first pick.)

Sure, we heard the odds were 19.9 percent that the Celts would get the first pick and 38.7 percent that they would at worst end up with the second, but we didn't listen.

And like everyone else, I was depressed.

But two days later, I had an epiphany of sorts. I was witnessing an event at Northeastern University for about 500 Boston middle schoolers who had perfect attendance during the school year. Presenting their awards was Al Jefferson, aka Big Al—the Celtics' 6'10" center.

Watching the man of the hour got me to thinking, and I realized: The Celtics already have a franchise center. As it happened, one who would pay me a visit at NECN later that day.

But first, Jefferson spoke to the kids about staying in school, which is interesting because Big Al went directly to the NBA without going to college. But he was convincing, telling them that education is where it's at. Sports are a sideshow; only a rare few make it big.

As he spoke, I wondered what was going through his mind when Celtics fans said they wanted a franchise center.

Guess what: He was pissed.

"I wasn't happy with the losing or the stuff about Oden," Jefferson told me. "We have a good nucleus. We just haven't been healthy. I'm not against Oden or anybody else, but I think I'm pretty good."

Big Al is understating his worth. He's very, very good. Only in his third season, he was one of the most improved players in the league last year. After struggling through his first two years, in which he was too often either hurt or clueless, he was a new man this winter.

He admits that life isn't easy in t metropolitan Northeast. The pride of hometown, Prentiss, Miss., Jefferson in a graduating high school class of The closest big city, Jackson, isn't exac midtown Manhattan.

There was an adjustment, but at age he's made it. Isn't that amazing? He third-year veteran, and I'm willing to that Big Al has already made it to the n level. He's approaching stardom and perstardom if he continues on the pace set this season, as he doubled his poi (7.9 to 16.0), rebounds (5.0 to 10.9) a assists (0.5 to 1.3) from his sophomo year averages.

The best thing about Big Al is that h bought what Doc Rivers and Danny Ai are selling. He says that young players n to play and losing isn't always a bad thi

I'M WILLING TO SAY THAT BIG AL HAS ALREADY MADE IT TO THE NEXT LEVEL

He mentions guys like Gerald Green Rajon Rondo.

"I just want to win," Big Al says. "I w to get better every game. I want to help Celtics win. I love it here."

Big Al has had only one coach, Rivers, and one captain, Paul Pierce, s entering the league. He says he believe both of them. If I hadn't heard him say i me directly, I probably wouldn't have lieved him. But the big kid from way d South is convincing.

I also don't believe the Celtics are i bad shape as many people think. Don't me wrong: They're not in particul good shape, but they aren't a complete aster, either.

Big Al is the kind of guy you wan build the franchise around. He and Pi have shown they can co-exist, and I lieve they can win a lot of games toget Anyway, it's time to quit worrying a what the Celtics don't have and ins focus on what they've got.

The Celtics have Big Al. I'm willin ride the guy out. IB

CARLOS WATSON

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Miami native, businessman, journalist and television host Carlos Watson is one of four children and the only son of two teachers. After graduating from Ransom Everglades School, he earned a degree in government from Harvard, nd he wrote over 50 articles for the Miami erald and Detroit Free Press while still an ndergraduate. After graduating with hon- s in 1991, he worked as chief of staff and mpaign manager for a Florida congress- an and on the Clinton campaign in liami. He then attended Stanford Law chool, where he was an editor of the law re- ew and president of the student govern- ent. After two years with McKinsey (the gh-powered consulting firm), he founded chieva College Prep Service, which ickly became one of the country's top col- ge-preparatory services. In 2002, he sold it a publicly traded company, and his success rned him attention from Time, the Wall reet Journal and the New York Times. He en segued into a TV career with guest ap- earances on Fox and Court TV. He hosted is first prime-time interview show on NBC in 2003, featuring then–presidential ppeful Howard Dean, quarterback Joe lontana and actress Eva Longoria. CNN en hired him as a regular news contributor, nd he became a political commentator, vering the 2004 presidential election. He so hosted two more interview programs, nd in 2006 he founded Run Rabbit Run roductions to produce his current program, onversations With Carlos Watson. He is the -owner of the professional soccer team DC nited and serves on the board of College rack. He lives in New York.

onathan Soroff: So what's your recipe for od conversation?

arlos Watson: You gotta start with in- iguing guests and a real sense of humor. hen you've gotta surprise people, throw m off guard a little bit.

S: So you're a master of the curveball?

W: I hope so. There's a little Pedro in all f us.

S: Best conversationalist you've ever met?

W: Wow. You gotta say the queen, don't ou? Oprah. But a very close second might e Howard Dean. He's as fun as all get out. normously funny and unscripted. And rnold [Schwarzenegger]. He's a good time.

S: Hardest or most uncomfortable topic ou've ever had to broach?

CW: Talking unconventional pregnancy situations with Heidi Klum.

JS: Do you believe in the old saying about never bringing up money, politics or religion in polite conversation?

CW: No, no, no. In fact, one of the best conversations I've had was with Creflo Dollar. He's a minister down in Atlanta. We talked money and politics and religion. You know, what's very interesting is that the common thread among people who are very spiritual—Hillary, Oprah, Diddy, Jeff Gordon—is that I don't think a lot of people would think that about them.

JS: Favorite topic?

CW: I love hearing about people's favorite movies. I'm a movie junkie, and I feel like it says a lot about people.

> "OH, I STOKE THE FIRE! AS THE SONG SAYS, 'BURN, BABY, BURN, DISCO INFERNO!'"

JS: Favorite movie ever?

CW: Casablanca.

JS: So you're a romantic?

CW: Well, there's also a lot of intrigue in that movie.

JS: How do you steer a conversation away from a potentially radioactive subject or somewhere you just don't want to go?

CW: Why would I?

JS: Well, what do you do when a conversation gets heated?

CW: Oh, I stoke the fire! As the song says, "Burn, baby, burn, disco inferno!" So yeah, to the extent that it's going to shed some light and be intriguing, why not? And I think the best conversationalists do want to go to some difficult places.

JS: Ever raise your voice when you're doing your show?

CW: Good question. Nah, not in anger, but I'll tease people. I'm a terrible tease, and a lot of people have a good sense of humor about themselves. Shaq's got a great sense of humor. So does Jeff Gordon. Hillary and I laughed a lot.

CW: No.

JS: Yup. In a steam room. And he's the largest human being I've ever seen. Literally a giant.

CW: Yeah, he's sizable. Y'know, he was only going to give me 10 minutes, so I had my Mom come in. She shows up and grabs his hand and says, "Shaq, you're my son. Meet my other son. My other son needs more than 10 minutes with you." He was like, "OK, Mrs. Watson."

JS: Your opinion of talk radio?

CW: It's a trip. I like it. And some of these people bring up really good points. I especially love the talk radio in small towns.

JS: Oh yeah, the lower the stakes the more worked up people get about things.

CW: And sometimes there are a couple of regulars who always call in with great little historical gems.

JS: One person—dead or alive—you'd most like to have on your show?

CW: Oh, Muhammad Ali in his prime would be my ultimate guest, because he was great at what he did and it would be intriguing to talk about the boxing, but you could also talk philosophy, religion, politics, war, love. What could you not discuss with Ali? He would be a megaguest.

JS: OK, you can invite five living people to dinner. Who are they?

CW: I'd have to invite President Bush. The truth of the matter is he still has more access to more information than most anybody else, whether it's good or bad. I'd want Mandela. [Chuckles.] I'm going to invite my girl Chelsea Handler, my favorite new comedian. Michelle Bachelet, the new president of Chile. She's gotta have some interesting perspectives. And then I guess one of the Russian oligarchs, like [Alexander] Abramov, because he knows some things about how the world works that we can't even dream of.

JS: Good list, except that there were no evil dictators, aside from George Bush.

CW: [Laughs.] That's only because I don't want to get blown up during dinner.

JS: Do you regret having said that George W. Bush was the most talented politician of the decade?

CW: [Laughs.] I did not have sexual relations with that woman! Um, yeah. I've got to say yes. Bad call. But I will say this: It was a nuanced article, so I hope people read the whole thing. In the first paragraph, I said, "100,000 votes different, and I'd be writing a completely different column."

JS: Would you rather be the male Oprah Winfrey or the black Charlie Rose?

CW: That's as easy a question as you could ask. Male Oprah Winfrey, comin' up next.

JS: Is it true that you were kicked out of kindergarten?

CW: Rudely so. Yes. Not only that, but they suggested that—in those days they didn't say "learning challenged" or anything like that—they just said "retarded." They thought I should be tested for it.

JS: What were you doing—eating paste, sticking erasers up your nose, sniffing chalk dust, what?

CW: Well, they'd ask what I thought were stupid questions, like "What's two plus two?" and I'd say, "Yellow." I thought that was enormously funny. They did not. See, I was extremely close to my older sister. She's two years ahead of me. We were always together. So she went off to kindergarten and after school every day would teach me everything she'd learned. So by the time I got to kindergarten, it was stuff my sister had done with me half a lifetime ago. It was boring, and I honestly thought they must be half-joking, and clearly they weren't.

JS: Do you believe in doing well by doing good?

CW: I do. When I meet people like Joe Montana, who's incredibly kind, I'm reminded that life sometimes is nasty, brutish and short, but sometimes good things happen to good people.

JS: You co-own a pro soccer team, DC United. Any chance of wooing David Beckham?

CW: I'd get in trouble with the commissioner if I said yes to that.

JS: Last question: Would you ever take a vow of silence?

CW: [Very long pause.] OK, so that's not that funny. IB

With a growing family of fashionable restaurants, everything Oringer touches turns to delicious.

RENAIS-SHNCE KEN

By Ruth Tobias

AS A WRITER, I try to approach words the way, say, celebrated chef-restaurateur Ken Oringer approaches exotic ingredients: with a sense of wonder and a knack for showcasing them in striking combinations. But an article on a day in the life of Oringer himself brooks no zingy rhetoric. As he negotiates two nearly simultaneous restaurant openings—taqueria La Verdad and steakhouse KO Prime—on the eve of Clio's 10th anniversary, his every moment is too full for me to waste space on style. Come join us; you'll see what I mean.

FRIDAY, MAY 11, 11 AM Toro

The first thing that hits me when I arrive for Toro's weekly staff meeting is the last thing I'd expect from a restaurant with an open kitchen: calm and quiet. No rock on the airwaves, no raucous laughter in the air—just three or four clean-cut young men in pristine chef's whites moving deliberately around the spotless workspace, methodically separating eggs, trimming brussels sprouts. Others soon appear out of nowhere: managers Alyssa Shepherd and Adam St. Jean, who's chatting with a willowy, dark-haired beauty. She turns to me, smiling, and introduces herself as Celine, Oringer's wife of nearly a year and co-owner of Toro. Before I can pry into their courtship, Oringer arrives—shaggy-haired, denim-clad, a backpack over one shoulder. At 41 years old, he's a ringer for a college senior. Her eyes light up. He heads straight for her. They literally nuzzle. I stare at the wine specials on the blackboard, pondering my romance-writing credentials.

But then the room comes into focus for Ken (as we'll now call him; we're about to get to know him pretty well), and the conversation turns to lighthearted matters of business—like whether or not Toro's new watermelon-based cocktail is "girlie"—until Ken's cell rings (as it does, on average, 20 times an hour). When he hangs up, he laughingly tells us, "I just told a purveyor if he could find me a new Uni recruit I'd pay him $1,000. Doing the backwards headhunter thing." Finally Ken, Celine, Adam, Alyssa and chef de cuisine John Critchley—one of the tidy young gents from the kitchen—gather around one of the tapas bar's long communal tables to talk turkey. Or, rather, pork belly, octopus and glass eels. ("They're up to $350 a pound," Ken remarks, "so we'd have to charge, like, $65 for a small order.") They talk equipment repairs, from dishwashers to fire alarms. They talk patio maintenance, hiring practices, entertainment licenses. They even talk Pamplona: Ken wants to do something special for the Running of the Bulls—maybe rent a widescreen TV to air it live, or throw a costume party with free churros for guests who dress up.

For such a casual, leisurely meeting—only John and Alyssa take notes—it's surprisingly orderly, especially given the sheer range of topics they're covering. As Ken observes later, "[People] think, 'Somebody cooks something, somebody serves it and somebody eats it.' It all seems so simple. But it's much more complex than that. It takes all these people to run a restaurant. I love the teamwork."

12:15 PM Silver Line, en route to Downtown Crossing

Yes, Ken Oringer takes public transportation. Though he has a license, he isn't an ardent motorist (unless a low-rider pickup is involved; more on that later). Next stop: spanking-new steakhouse KO Prime.

"When Kimpton [Hotels] approached me, they said I could do anything I wanted to do. So I said, 'Why doesn't someone do a steakhouse that's a real restaurant? We'll serve beef from all over the world—all different types, from dry-aged to prime to bistro-type cuts to Japanese Wagyu to corn-fed to grass-fed. Let's have every part of the animal from oxtail to sweetbreads. Let's have everything from an organic salad to raw fish dishes.'"

"A steakhouse everyone can visit," I prompt.

"Yeah, and a couple of times a week! Create a modern, sexy feel, bring in a younger clientele, so it's not the old boys' club…."

But just as he's warming to his subject we pass through Chinatown, and he gets a wistful look. "I usually like to spend a lot of time in Chinatown, looking for exotic ingredients. If I didn't have so much to do today I'd probably get off the bus right now, grab a Vietnamese sandwich"—he gestures toward the awning of New Saigon—"and go to the market." And then? "Some of the stuff I play with I never can figure out how to use; some ends up on the menu that night. We have kimchi paste in our cocktail sauce at KO Prime. I really like thinking about the details people don't even detect."

OK, but what about the big picture? Is he carving out a vast empire, with La Verdad and KO Prime just the latest two ventures—as he must know some industry-watchers suspect—or simply living in the moment? Ken shrugs. "I'm far from a dreamer. A lot of people have big dreams but they're so full of shit they can never make things happen. If I had stopped to think about it, opening a taqueria and a steakhouse within a month of each other—it's suicide. But if I have the opportunity to do something I want to d I'm going to do it; I'll figure out how to make it work. In terms of conquering the world…" He pauses. "I just want to do what I can have fun with. Because I'm married now. In three years, I'm going to have kids, and I'm not going to want to b working 120 hours a week."

But right now, it's obvious he's loving

12:30 PM KO Prime

This kitchen's much bigger and more cluttered than Toro's. Yet here, too, the pace remains methodical, the decibel level low.

Ken's got his fingers in a dish of potat roasted garlic gratin; he's grabbing a slice of prosciutto and asking, "What are you doing with this?"; he's checking out a pa full of duck necks: "Wow, nice, what was the price?" And when he has a question, his employees have an answer. Always. Not once in the course of the day do I hear an "I don't know" or "I forget."

The IMPROPER photographer sets up a shoot with Ken and chef de cuisine Jamie Bissonnette, about whom Ken enthuses, "I almost like destiny—his neighbor in Connecticut was my roommate in college He's not afraid of bold flavors; I love how he's very French-oriented, but he's a bistr cook at heart. And he's a fun guy. He's a lunatic." The photographer keeps urging Ken to smile; he gives Jamie a grotesque l

1:30 PM Green Line, en route to Hynes

I mention my surprise at the cool compos ure his kitchen crews emanate—so far fr the rowdy, breakneck stereotype. "I like t things to be very organized," Ken conced "I can't stand chaos, people scrambling around. Wait'll we go to La Verdad—'ca then you're going to see not-orderly." He

As at all his restaurants, Oringer likes to have a hand in everything that goes on at Clio, from choosing the dining room décor (opposite page, bottom) to food prep, plating and service.

ghs. "Even Clio was easier [to open] than a Verdad. It has something to do with hat's not familiar to me. When you think bout it, a taqueria's a taqueria; it's as down nd dirty as you can get. I had a really high ision of how La Verdad would be, but I'd ever had to deal with 250 people in one our. We're charging less for a taco than nyone"—I imagine that's debatable, but on't interject—"yet we're making verything ourselves. But people who come or a $2 taco and a $4 Corona aren't going o notice. So even if your vision is as serious s it is, they don't take it as seriously. It's een quite a learning experience."

:45 PM Clio

en and his longtime general manager, Christian Touche, catch up excitedly on he preparations for Clio's 10th-anniver- ary party on June 10—a $1,000-a-head enefit for the Harvard Center for Neurodegeneration, with guest chefs oming from top restaurants around the vorld. As Ken goes to change into his hef's whites, Touche—clearly in a eflective mood—traces the path to such momentous occasion.

Back when the Eliot Hotel had no vorld-class restaurant, he recalls in his hick French accent, a young man with a ackpack approached him in the breakfast oom after taking notes on his French oast. "He says, 'I'm the new guy.' He xplains his concept: He wants to do vant-garde food but with a base of tradi- ional French cooking. We connect, and he asks me to be his manager. And I say es without knowing 10 years later I would still be here. [Now] we're like an old couple. Before he was married, my wife called him my mistress."

I don't have to ask any questions; Touche is on a roll. "His philosophy was very simple: Focus on food. [Use] white plates. No flowers on the table. No salt and pepper. Some people were upset: 'Where's the salt?' They complained about portion sizes. They wanted mashed potatoes and weren't happy if they didn't leave with doggie bags.... But back then I said, 'Wow, it would be great if you really brought something new to Boston.' And it happened. When [Ken] has something in his head and he knows it is right, he doesn't change a thing. And usually he is right."

2 PM Clio kitchen

I know what to expect by now: a crew of six or seven well-groomed young men working quietly and intently on a given task. One shells a heap of lobster tails, one gingerly separates sheets of bean curd, one chops chives at warp speed. What I don't expect: They're doing it all in a kitchen no bigger than the one in my own dinky apartment.

Nor do I anticipate the hugeness of the treasure trove that is the downstairs pantry, and the excitement with which Ken still raids it. Jars and bottles and bags and bins cram the shelves, their labels in Spanish, Korean, Arabic. A prep table is piled high with produce Ken virtually fondles—long beans, ramps, green garlic. He thrusts baggies of fresh chocolate mint and lemon verbena under my nose for a sniff, has me taste cherry-blossom petals from the walk-in freezer that's lined with containers of mushroom oil and lamb tongues.

Back upstairs, sous chef Andres Julian Grundy presents him with a foie gras special-in-progress, garnished with a bright pink rhubarb-lavender foam. Ken tastes it, ponders, responds unhurriedly: "The rhubarb is delicious. The lavender comes out nicely—perfumey, but not like grandma's closet. The color is crazy. Can we use a different plate?" Next he tries some burrata soup—spoonful, pause, spoonful, pause—and directs a line cook to add a little chorizo juice to the batch. And then he suggests we head to La Verdad "before it gets too crazy"—the Sox are in town that evening, and the sun has come out. It's a warm spring afternoon. He's still wearing his apron.

3:45 PM Walking to La Verdad

Granted, he admits, his whole life has been an apron-clad journey.

"I couldn't wait to get my first job. The first day I was allowed to work legitimately, I was at a department store restaurant. I remember cracking 12 dozen eggs, and I was so excited just to do that. I'd never seen so many eggs at one time. Then I went to business school...."

Does that mean becoming a restaurateur as well as a chef was always part of the plan? "Yes. I like to be my own boss. I never wanted people telling me what to do. But even then I'd cook whenever I could. I'd go into people's dorm rooms and look in their fridges and say, 'Oh, I'll cook you dinner.' It was a good way to meet girls."

3:55 PM La Verdad

Ken makes the rounds, greeting the line cooks in Spanish, shaking hands; he smiles at the matronly tortilla lady, impassively working handfuls of dough from an enormous bowl of masa. It's obvious he gets a charge out of the month-old taqueria, co-owned by the locally ubiquitous Lyons Group. "We really wanted to create something very funky, Mexico City street-style. We wanted a takeout window. We've got 60 tequilas, all 100 percent agave. In the margaritas, there's no triple sec, no Cointreau, none of that stuff. That's why we call it La Verdad—it's the truth of Mexican street cooking."

As the bar fills up with pre-game revelers, we rejoin the IMPROPER photographer out on the curb, where an electric-blue low-rider truck sits, emblazoned with Day of the Dead–style decals. Ken merrily boasts, "It's our only form of advertising. The horn plays 'La Cucaracha,' the Mexican Jumping Bean song.... I just want to drive it up and down Newbury Street." He gets behind the wheel and mugs for the camera. But his eye never strays for long; as we leave, he spies a bartender going the wrong way with a tray of margaritas and confers with her briefly to find out why. (Too strong, the customers complained. Apparently the truth hurts.)

4:45 PM Walking back to Clio

I ask a man who doesn't seem to have a moment to spare what his ideal day off would look like. "Probably just chilling out," he decides. "I'd go do yoga in the morning with Celine, go to some really funky place for brunch. Then maybe go to a movie, grab some cocktails, have some people over for dinner. There'd be a lot of laughter...." I interrupt. "You'd cook on your day off?" He laughs. "Yeah. But we don't have a kitchen in our apartment right now. It's under construction."

Rather than shifting focus to his newest ventures, KO Prime (top) and La Verdad, Oringer has simply added them to his daily itinerary. He even finds time to play bartender at the taqueria.

"Building your dream kitchen, are you?" Oddly, it's the first topic he seems reluctant to delve into. But after hesitating, he admits, "It's going to be a whole-roof addition—very modern, very minimalist. There'll be an immersion circulator, a taco jet…." At least that sounds like what he says. I don't ask him to repeat himself, pleased with the idea that I might not have misheard—that if Ken Oringer wanted to invent something called a taco jet, he probably could.

5 PM Clio pre-meal meeting
Crisply dressed for service, the waitstaff gather at the back of the dining room with Ken and sommelier Ryan Cole, who goes over the evening's reservations list: This one's a "five-time Valentine's Day" guest; this party was sent over by No. 9 Park due to accommodation issues ("wow 'em"); this one's a "super-VIP" from a major (nonlocal) newspaper.

Then Ken takes the floor, describing overnight changes to the menu. It turns out the foie gras special hasn't made the cut; he's told the foam wouldn't hold. He seems disappointed on his sous chef's behalf.

5:20 PM Sidewalk in front of Clio
The entire kitchen crew heads outside for a cigarette break, where they discuss last-minute prep. I express amazement that I've never observed this public huddle before, but Ken swears, "We've never missed one in 10 years."

5:25 PM Uni
Ken checks in with Uni chef Christopher Chung to ensure the sashimi bar is sufficiently stocked for him to swipe some of the goods. "We just got a big shipment from Japan, so we'll probably use a lot of fish for the tasting menu," he tells me, looking around to see what he can "play with."

Wait a second, I stop him. You improvise your tasting menus? "Yeah." He smiles, surprised that I'm surprised. "It's all spontaneous."

5:30 PM Clio pastry kitchen
Ken oversees a pastry cook making "citrus rice": He puts marinated orange and grapefruit segments into a bowl, pours in liquid nitrogen from a hefty tank and begins mashing them; before my eyes, they turn into tiny frozen grains. He gives me a taste: tart, unadulterated citrus.

5:40 Clio office
For the first time that day, literally, Ken sits down to relax with Celine, who has stopped in to discuss the midnight birthday party they'll be attending. My jaw goes slack. She gets it, confirming, "He's always go, go, go. If he didn't do it, he wouldn't be able to function." He tries to argue, but she insists: "He and Christian are like little kids, running around. They get so excited about every new cheese that comes in."

5:45 PM Uni
Cue the intermission music: I'm wolfing sashimi, my first meal since mid-morning. Ken, who eats as he goes, has returned to work.

6:30 PM Clio kitchen
I've spent the day with multiple personalities: shrewd businessman, jovial frat boy, googly-eyed newlywed. But Ken the chef is the source of and model for everything I've seen in operation today—which, in turn, is the antithesis of all the kitchen-set psychodramas on reality TV. The pace he sets is swift but even; his voice is loud but steady as he calls out orders from the tickets he keeps in front of him at all times, running the show. At any given time there might be a dozen tickets in play—half of them for tasting menus, some of them for room service, many involving special requests. Somehow, he keeps it all in his head, and expedites it mostly in complete sentences.

Ken to a waiter on a fussy tasting party: "No raw fish, no foie gras—do they even like food? Find out how adventurous they are."

Ken to the crew as service peaks: "We've got a lot of menus out now, so bang 'em out. We do not want to be slowing down. Pick it up, boys." (This is as close to a harangue as he comes.)

Ken to a line cook: "What have we got for the kids?" Not even mac 'n' cheese is beneath his concern.

Out in the dining room, the big-time journalist has arrived. "VIP on table 47. All right, three amuses for table 47." Before sending them out, he shows me the tray: an array of tiny beakers and vials, all containing savory sodas and ice cream cones. "There must be 30 ingredients in here," he says, rattling them off as though he's been making the dish he just created on the spot all his life.

9 PM Green Line, en route to Park Street
Come on, I challenge him anew. Has his placid, respectful demeanor been for my benefit? He laughs. "Believe me, I've had my days. But people make mistakes. If they're smart enough to deal with it, I feel that I am very fair." OK then, what's a mistake he was smart enough to deal with

"Once I put some persimmon in a blender, added some salt and some yuzu juice, and the fruit kind of coagulated. It looked like sea urchin. So we served it in a sea urchin shell with soft tofu and Japanese herbs. People would say, 'Oh, I don't eat urchin,' and we'd say, '[Just] taste it.'"

9:15 PM KO Prime kitchen
Both the bar and the dining room are packed. The kitchen crew sport a few splattered jackets, a few glazed eyes, but they're hardly the zombies you'd expect on the first Friday night in business. Ken jumps right back into it. But he refrains from taking over, following Jamie's directions and even running a few dishes out to the dining room himself. As I head out to the bar to meet him for a wrap-up, he's helping a veritable schoolboy work the grill: "Don't take any chances," he's advising. "If they want it well done, make it well done."

In short, he's working as hard now as he has all day.

9:45 PM KO Prime bar
Surprised by greetings from a mutual acquaintance, we sit down to margaritas and a few appetizers with her and her friends—one of whom whistles, "Wow, Ken Oringer in the flesh." He smiles but says nothing, seeming to take the compliment with his trademark equanimity. And when I depart, he's still sitting there, chatting about the difference between Kobe and Wagyu, passing the time before Celine arrives to take him to the birthday party.

Imagine—tomorrow, he'll start all over again. IB

The Talented Tomato

Are you ready for the best taste of the season? By Carolyn Faye Fox

EAGERLY ANTICIPATED and widely celebrated, the tomato is the Miss America in New England's pageant of summer fruits and vegetables. Strutting its juicy stuff in a spectacular range of colors and shapes, it's the undisputed star of the seasonal menu, cherished by chefs for its versatility and by local farmers for its sheer deliciousness and unparalleled diversity—a diversity that can be overwhelming, according to Tom Ashley, who grows more than a hundred varieties of heirloom tomatoes at his Dancing Bear Farm in western Massachusetts.

"I'm trying my best to cut down," he says, sounding like a candidate for a 12-step program. "It's very confusing to catalogue them all, and there's not enough space in my greenhouse or brain."

Ashley, who sells seedlings to Boston-area farm stores and retails his tomatoes at the Newton Farmers Market, plans to narrow his list to 50 finalists that are "the most popular and cover the gamut of color, size, shape and texture."

Does he have a personal favorite? "Brandywine is the poster boy of heirloom tomatoes," he says, but tomatoes defy easy categorization unless you're a botanist. Each type has three or four varieties, he explains. For example, striped Germans, Hillbillies and Pineapple are all varieties of bicolor tomatoes.

Judging a tomato's merits, like judging a beauty contest, is inevitably influenced by personal preference. For his part, Ashley values consistently good flavor: "I always like a Brandywine. It really never lets you down, although it's not the greatest producer."

He's also a fan of the yellow Brandywine, although he's quick to mention t "it's not a low-acid yellow." Yellow tom toes, less acidic than their red relatives have become increasingly popular, but "lower acid means less flavor," Ashley explains. "Some tomatoes are almost tc sweet. What makes it taste like a toma is a balance of acids and sugars."

As for other contenders, Ashley wax enthusiastic about "almost all the black tomatoes, like Cherokee Purple. They have a real distinctive, rich flavor. Ann Russian, in the Oxheart family, is very meaty, with tiny little seeds—slice into and it's almost like a slab of liver."

Want a tasty tomato with a decent shelf life? Ashley suggests the Garden Peach: "It's small and fuzzy. When it's dead-ripe, it develops a pink-red blush on its yellow flesh. They keep for a lo long time, [which is probably] attribu able to the skin."

Ashley, whose tomatoes grace tables restaurants such as Lumière, Rialto and Henrietta's Table, encourages everyone t

Gordon Hamersley's Tomato Salad

Makes about ⅔ cup

For this simple recipe, from Bistro Cooking at Home, Hamersley advises blanching the scallions for 45 seconds in boiling water, then cooling under cold running water, to mellow their oniony bite.

- 2 medium ripe tomatoes, peeled, seeded and diced small
- 2 scallions, white parts and about 1 inch of the green, thinly sliced
- 2 tablespoons chopped fresh parsley
- 1 teaspoon sherry vinegar
- 1 tablespoon extra-virgin olive oil
- Kosher salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste

Combine ingredients in a small bowl and allow flavors to blend.

eriment. "Tomatoes don't have to be red a l round."

Maybe not, but that's the way Gordon Hamersley, chef/owner of Hamersley's Bistro, likes them.

"Most people like red tomatoes in the beefsteak variety," he says. "Bicolored ones are kinda cool. I like the beefsteak tomato."

It's a preference shared by Peter McCarthy, chef/owner of EVOO in Somerville, who buys his tomatoes from various farmers' markets and Concord's Verrill Farms. "The good ol' red beefsteak is awesome," he says.

Beefsteak may be basic, but to meet Hamersley's standards, it has to be grown locally. Years ago, he grew his own tomatoes just outside the back door of his restaurant's kitchen to ensure high quality, a chore he's been happy to give up.

"The days of ordering your tomatoes from Florida and sticking them in a truck to ripen into pale-pink weirdo things are gone, thank god," Hamersley says. "It's always a thrill when any local tomatoes come through"—and they're worth the wait. "The height of the season is the last week in August and the first week in September; we like the ones that come around the second week of August," he says.

Hamersley buys most of his tomatoes from Verrill Farms and the rest from Blue Heron Farm ("my organic connection") in Lincoln. "We are supremely lucky to have so many farmers' markets and small farms in Massachusetts," he says. "I wouldn't call myself a tomato expert, but I've never tasted a tomato in California that tasted good. Must be the dirt and the rocks" of New England that make the difference, he adds.

Hamersley's preference for round, red specimens comes as a surprise to Ellery Kimball, who's managed Blue Heron Farm for seven years. "Really!" she exclaims. "It's probably a lot easier to cook with beefsteaks."

On the other hand, Kimball never meets a tomato she doesn't love. "It's my favorite food," she says. "Every year we add new varieties, and now we grow 20. My favorite is low-acid striped German, yellow with red streaks—a big, ugly-shaped tomato." She's especially partial to raw tomatoes, "green and red zebra, striped German, Brandywine and Black Prince, all the different colors in a salad."

Some chefs delight in taking tomatoes far beyond BLTs and gazpacho. Frank McClelland, chef/owner of L'Espalier and this year's regional James Beard Award winner, introduced a series of multicourse heirloom-tomato dinners last summer. Paired with wine, dishes included heirloom sunburst yellow tomato water with trapped Chatham squid, pickled eggplant and lovage, and a main course of grilled beef ribeye with green tea–smoked heirloom tomatoes and green onion.

Finally, our local tomatoes may not twirl batons or parade themselves in swimsuits, but they do compete against each other at the annual Tomato Contest and Festival at City Hall Plaza. Last year, more than 100 entries from across the state were rated in categories that included best slicing tomato, best cherry tomato, best heirloom tomato and heaviest tomato. As in previous years, a panel of judges—mostly chefs and food writers—assessed flavor, quality, color and shape.

Every tomato gets a chance to shine at this event sponsored by the Massachusetts Department of Agricultural Resources, the Federation of Massachusetts Farmers' Markets and the New England Vegetable and Berry Growers Association. When it ends there are no tears of joy, no Miss Congeniality and no schedule of public appearances. Instead, there's... salad. IB

EVOO's Summer Tomato Salsa

akes about 4 cups

-4 tablespoons minced pickled jalapeño tablespoons chopped fresh cilantro tablespoons fresh squeezed lime juice tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil teaspoon kosher salt teaspoon fresh ground black pepper ombine all ingredients in a large bowl.

Chris Coombs' Zebra Tomatoes, Buffalo Mozzarella and Watermelon Two Ways, With Tomato Vinaigrette

Serves 4

Coombs, executive chef of dbar in Dorchester, is growing his own heirloom tomatoes, on his restaurant's rooftop, where a full day's sunlight means healthy happy plants. He expects to prepare this recipe when the tomatoes are ripe.

3 green zebra tomatoes, sliced ½ inch thick
3 red zebra tomatoes, sliced ½ inch thick
8 ounces Mandara buffalo mozzarella, sliced ¼ inch thick
1 baby sugar melon about 6 inches in diameter, seeded and sliced ¼ inch thick
3 ounces watermelon rind, shaved thin with a peeler

Vinaigrette:
1 very ripe zebra tomato, puréed and strained through cheesecloth for juice
3 tablespoons Banyuls wine vinegar
¼ cup extra-virgin olive oil
Fresh basil, parsley and chives, coarsely chopped
3 teaspoons fleur de sel
1 teaspoon fresh cracked pepper

To pickle watermelon rind:
Remove the green skin of the watermelon and thinly shave the rind with a peeler. Heat two parts rice wine vinegar and one part sugar; when this mixture reaches a boil, place shaved watermelon rind inside and turn off heat. Refrigerate mixture immediately. Ready to eat in two hours.

Here's the Catch

Local chefs dish on their favorite fish markets, clam shacks and lobster pounds. By Elizabeth Bomze

YOU CRAVE CHEESESTEAKS, you go to Philly. Gotta have fork-tender barbecue? Head South, young man. But when the snow finally melts, the All-Star break approaches and Route 3 is a parking lot of beach traffic, Bostonians want nothing more (or less) than a taste of our local claim to fame—a mound of just barely mayonnaised lobster meat on a toasted bun or fried clam bellies piled high in a paper bag—to feel like summer's in full swing. ■ Same goes for this town's top chefs. Sure, they preside over classy joints, but this is simple seafood country, and not even foodies with the most refined talents and honed palates can resist seeking out, as Troquet executive chef Scott Herbert puts it, "some good New England fried stuff." Here's where Boston's most accomplished cookers (and eaters) head to indulge.

Gordon Hamersley
Chef/owner of Hamersley's Bistro
His seafood sanctuaries: Captain Marden's, 279 Linden St., Wellesley (781-235-0860); Twin Seafood, 2 Church St., Concord (978-371-9030)
Why he likes them: "Food gets too fancy sometimes, in my opinion. These are really simple places. I used to get seafood [to serve at the Bistro] at Captain Marden's before they moved their warehouse. I love their chowder and fried fish sandwich. And Twin Seafood is a retail fish place with a lunch counter. I get their clam rolls with extra tartar sauce. I'm a fried-clam–aholic."
How many clams? Captain Marden's: New England clam chowder ($3.50–$4.95), classic fish sandwich ($6.50); Twin Seafood: Clam roll ($9.98)

Jason Bond
Executive chef at Beacon Hill Bistro
His seafood sanctuary: The Barnacle, 141 Front St., Marblehead (781-631-4236)
Why he likes it: "This is really a guilty-pleasure question. [The Barnacle] overlooks the ocean. It's one of those old-school seafood joints. In the city, you can't find that type of simplicity. The new chefs—they don't cook like that anymore."
How many clams? Fried clams ($19.95)

Ana Sortun
Chef/owner of Oleana
Her seafood sanctuary: Belle Isle Lobster & Seafood, 1267 Saratoga St., Boston (617-567-1619)
Why she likes it: "Belle Isle is the only secret I've got. It's a down 'n' dirty counter place, and it's the best deal in town. They've got huge portions, and the lobster roll is the best lobster roll outside of Maine. It's a half-pound of meat. That's all there is. And a tiny hint of mayo. It's to die for."
How many clams? Lobster roll ($15.99)

Anthony Susi
Chef/owner of Sage
His seafood sanctuaries: Morse Fish Co., 1401 Washington St., Boston (617-262-9375); Yankee Lobster Co., 300 Northern Ave., Boston (617-345-9799)
Why he likes them: "I go to both of these places when I'm out buying seafood. They've both got retail takeout counters with places to sit down. The lobster rolls [at Morse] are really superfresh and not expensive, and the fried clams are also great. And the swordfish [at Yankee Lobster] is also really solid."
How many clams? Morse Fish Co.: Lobster salad sandwich ($12.95); Yankee Lobster Co.: Broiled swordfish dinner ($12.95)

Evan Deluty
Executive chef/owner of Stella
His seafood sanctuaries: Neptune Oyster, 63 Salem St., Boston (617-742-3474); Hingham Lobster Pound, 4 Broad Cove Road, Hingham (781-749-1984)
Why he likes them: "In the city, I like Neptune Oyster. Besides their oysters, they have great chowder. I like it for its simplicity, authenticity and attention to detail with flavors. I [also] love the Hingham Lobster Pound. It's a sit-on-the-car kind of place—a box on the side of the road. You just order your fried clams and a couple sodas and sit on the trunk of the car. It's great summer-day stuff."
How many clams? Neptune Oyster: New England clam chowder ($9.50); Hingham Lobster Pound: Fried clams ($8.99–$31.99)

Tony Maws
Chef/owner of Craigie Street Bistrot
His seafood sanctuary: Woodman's, 121 Main St., Essex (978-768-6057)
Why he likes it: "I grew up fishing on the Vineyard, so I'm a seafood snob. I wish there were more good, casual seafood places; they're hard to find in Boston. But I really like Woodman's. I drive up there and hit some antiques stores. It's always a good time."
How many clams? Fried clams (market price)

Chris Schlesinger
Chef/owner of East Coast G and All Star Sandwich Bar
His seafood sanctuary: The Back Eddy, 1 Bridge Road, Westport (508-636-6500)
Why he likes it: "This place is the epitome summer. It's a tourist restaurant and lots o people are on vacation. They're catching fish and bringing them in. Everything is locally caught and locally raised. Oysters from Sakonnet. Clams from Westport. Lobsters are caught right off the dock."
How many clams? Dozen oysters ($12.50)¥ dozen clams ($10), lobster (market price)

Russell Ferguson
Executive sous chef at Eastern Standard

DONNA REED in ruffles and gingham? Gag us with a spoon. Aprons these days come in hipster styles that match your every meal mood. Reveal your fiery soul with jalapeño soup—and a camouflage turbo-pocket bib. Sauté oysters in candlelight and a sassy mini tie-back. Impress your raw or vegan guests with an organic linen wrap. "Aprons are as far away from frumpy as you can get," says Kristine Irving, owner of Koo De Kir on Beacon Hill. "I'm trying to find a way to wear them as street clothes!" So go ahead—tie one on.

1. Bistro Babe

So you routinely whip up confections like seven-layer chocolate raspberry mousse torte à la Julia? Dress the part in this chic black-and-white striped Parisian bistro number, ma cherie.

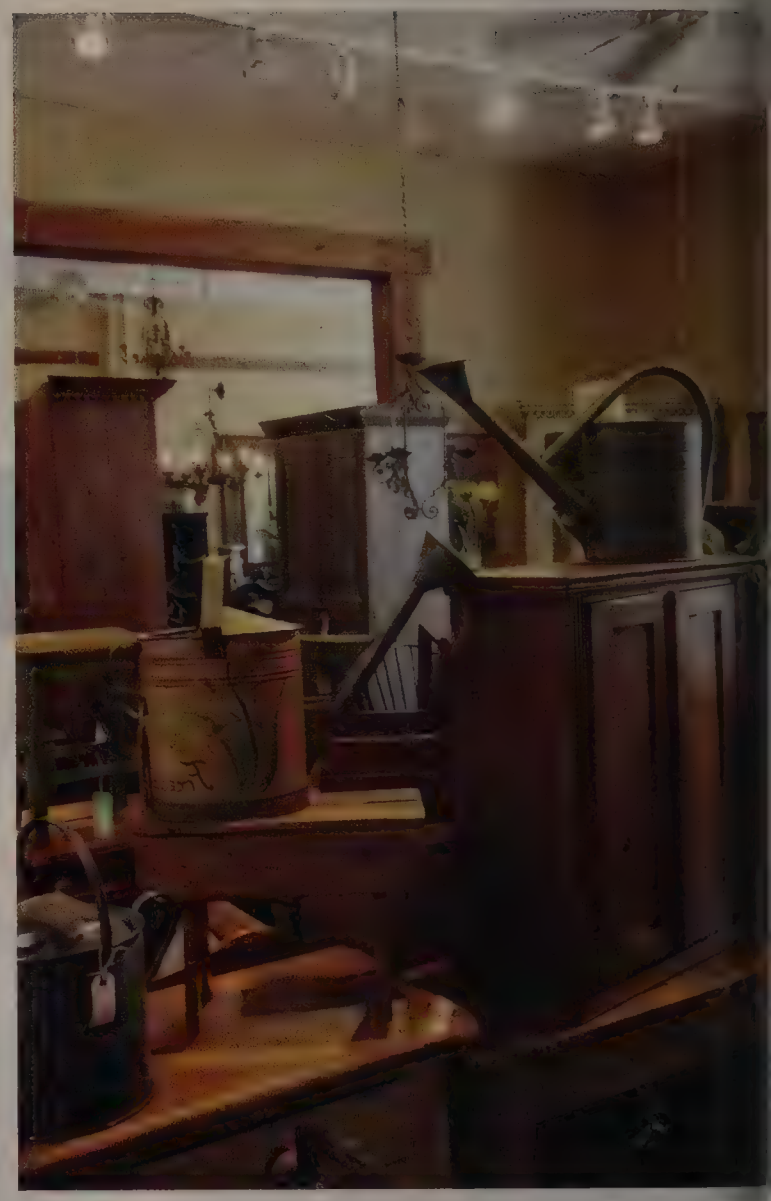
SERENDIPITOUS SHOPPING: OUR UNFETTERED CORRESPONDENT SEEKS OUT THE SALUBRIOUS AND THE CEREBRAL.

BY MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY



WORTHY OF A MAGNIFYING GLASS

In Miniature Books: 4,000 Years of Tiny Treasures, Anne C. Bromer and Julian I. Edison illuminate these small artifacts, some of which are currently on display at the Boston Public Library.

The format itself is a charming notion: a great big book celebrating the history of little tiny ones. These Tom Thumb treasures, often covered in "sumptuous leathers, sequins and embroidery on elegant silks," stretch across history and cover a huge expanse of subjects. Anne Boleyn carried one such book to her execution, open to an illustration of Henry VIII. Picasso used the intimacy of the form to illustrate a poem by his wife, Jacqueline Roque, with undulating, sea-wave shapes encasing a picture of a boat carrying two people. Playing with paradox, one London publisher in 1740 put out children's books about English architecture and called them Gigantick Histories. Also for kids, alphabet primers—published at the end of the 19th century and only two inches tall—today look very cute and very modern. Their jewel-like tininess fixes the eye sharply on each little inch. And while some were as abbreviated as text messages, serving to highlight poems, Fontaine's fables and quotable quotes, others squash a whole book into Smallsville. During WWII some actually attempted to "humanize" Adolf Hitler. Writ small, too, were books on smoking and drinking. Whatever the subject, they entrance.

EUROPE ON HURON

European Country Antiques (146 Huron Ave., Cambridge; 617-876-7483) sells English, French and Irish furniture and accessories.

These antiques are so consistently pure in style they make you feel transported to an actual English or French country manor. An 1850s farmhouse, say, or something grander, furnished with pine tables, bureaus and cabinets. The wood has a textured, waxed, honest quality, just a bit crinkled with age—far from the bland look of reproductions. Some have interesting, old, apple-green wood legs, while others used for farm work have metal ones. Many of the tables, ever so skinny across, could serve as a dining spot, affording intimate vis-à-vis, or alternatively a kitchen island. One beautiful piece has an archway beneath, creating a cozy dog kennel; another, a fishmonger's table, is zinc-topped. Green paint, slightly distressed with actual age, on boxes and small chairs imparts a rural flavor. A bureau, born in the 19th century, unwittingly anticipated the laptop—opening to hold, then closing to conceal it. Other sweet little cabinets invite new uses, too, becoming bedside tables. Accessories like dough rising bowls in maternal, round shapes and long wooden baguette holders resonate stylistically with the furniture.

MUSIC IN THE KEY OF FUN

The Vuk School of Groove (883 Cambridge St., Cambridge; 617-868-1118; www.schoolofgroove.com) offers classes in jazz, rock, blues, classical and more.

Imagine a school that blends an unintimidating atmosphere with a love of musical variety—and in deed grooviness—that isn't a dive. The School of Groove emanates that optimism, inviting people of all ages (they already stretch from 3 to 90 years old in various projects) and experience levels. Christopher Vuk, owner and multimusician whose skills range from classical to pop, believes in the positive fluidity of exploration, experimentation and ensemble work. "I had been a classical violinist, but needed to treat myself as a beginner with each new musical venture, which was very valuable." In a recent ensemble class, an 8-year-old drummer boy and an experienced woman several decades older on electric guitar worked together easily, each displaying curiosity. As they explored their musical turf, Ed Lucie helped them find that famous groove, suggesting ways they could accommodate each other, helping make the other sound good. In exotically painted rooms, students play, sing and study such things as the history of hip-hop. The entertaining pedagogy is respectfully and spectably delivered. Embracing the eclectic and the improvisational is the spirit, man.

REVIEW

NOT YOUR FATHER'S BISTRO

Inventive, oh-so-satisfying comfort food. If only your pop could cook this well.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

Only in America do you hear such a heartwarming story. A talented but kindly chef spends many years working behind the stoves of restaurants owned by others. Finally he opens his own place, in the most restaurant-intensive neighborhood of the city. South Enders flock to his door. His fame spreads to the 'burbs and boondocks. Everybody lives and eats happily ever after.

Pops takes its name from an old sobriquet for chef-owner Felino Samson, who created this lively, engaging Tremont Street eatery where one can enjoy, at very reasonable prices, familiar dishes tweaked with imaginative flair and executed with professionalism and panache. Take the Rhode Island clam stuffies ($9). Far from the clichéd, bready mush that often tries to pass for stuffed clams, this delectable duo of quahogs contained tender clams and spicy linguiça sausage, coarsely chopped into morsels about as big as the kernels of corn with which they were mixed. The mouth-pleasing texture of these diverse ingredients and their contrasting but compatible flavors—sweet, spicy, briny—surprised and delighted. Lobster and cod croquettes ($10), a trio of tasty, moist cakes, had been lightly battered and flash-fried so that their delicate crust emerged just thick enough to contain the ethereally light, soufflé-like mixture of lobster and cod inside. A well-constructed aioli provided the perfect embellishment.

Horseradish tartar sauce garnished the roasted poblano crab cakes ($12). Almost pure crabmeat except for the smoky-savory chopped poblano peppers, the cakes came with a refreshing salad of thinly sliced pickled cucumbers, ultrathin carrots and a few shards of fennel. The mellow sweetness of the bright-green smashed-pea filling in the crispy pea ravioli ($8) married well with the aromatic sage butter in which they had been sautéed, while the tender texture of the pasta held up. Sambal chicken wings ($7.50) turned out to be six hefty, meaty wings, dredged in cornmeal and deep-fried until very tender. Their presentation in a banana leaf made them difficult to eat with a knife and fork, and their coating of sweet-spicy sambal glaze made them messy to eat by hand—but they were so delicious that I dug right in.

Main courses for the most part sustained the high standards set by the starters. Braised carabuta pork ($18) combined extraordinary flavor—highlighted by a restrained dash of cumin—with extreme tenderness. Formed into a cylinder, the well-braised meat fell apart at the touch of a fork, rendering the sharp steak knife brought by the waitress unnecessary. The accompanying tomato-and-basil salad provided a tantalizing foretaste of summer, the cherry tomatoes exquisitely sweet and the basil minty and refreshing.

Grilled sirloin steak ($20) arrived rare as ordered, accompanied by good garlic-thyme fries. (On a subsequent visit the sirloin had been replaced by a skirt or hanger steak, a cut more typical for steak-frites.) Duck confit ($20) displayed the characteristic tenderness of confit, its full, rich flavor complemented by a sweet, tangy cherry-balsamic sauce. Thin slices of braised fennel provided an unanticipated dividend.

A trio of grilled sausage ($17) included three contrasting sausage types: provocatively robust North African mergu mildly flavored chicken sausage with touch of sage; and a traditional Italia style fennel pork sausage. The thr would have satisfied the most carniv rous of diners, but what pleased me m was their accompaniment: a ragout giant white beans and tender, pleasan bitter mustard greens. While the bea could have been firmer, their lusciousn and the flavor exchanges that occur among the sausage, greens, slivers of c rots and Italian parsley turned the d into a poor man's cassoulet, one of my vorite dishes.

Crispy-skin salmon ($19), a little c came with three garnishes, of which t worked but one didn't. Cucumber noo scented with miso and Thai basil wer delicious and refreshing as they were usual, and sesame flavoring added a t and aromatic dimension to steamed r The unsuccessful garnish, a candied-g snip pancake, seemed more bitter th sweet and had an unpleasant, starchy t ture. Last but certainly not least am the main courses, a cheeseburger ($ appeared on the dinner menu as spr approached summer. This generous, ha formed patty of lean ground beef been well-seared to preserve its rare, ju texture, while a mountain of singul delicious, sweet-savory caramelized on made it a burger extraordinaire, acc panied by Pops' garlic-thyme fries.

Pops' side dishes ranged from the c cate sautéed spinach ($4), a gene serving of silky-textured leaves sautée sesame butter to a perfect state of ten ness, to a blockbuster casserole of gno ($10). The latter, a large ramekin of g chi in a carbonara sauce of leeks, ba and cheese, could certainly never be c acterized as light and delicate. Its ro flavor and substantial body made it ar tire meal in itself, a sophisticated on that old comfort food cliché, ma cheese. Desserts (all $7) one evenin cluded a special chocolate mousse i oversized martini glass, light in te but intense in flavor, garnished amaretto cookie crumbles and slivere monds. White-chocolate bread pud garnished with Michigan sour che was moist and tasty.

ops accompanied its well-constructed hes with a pleasing variety of wines, hy served by the glass. My favorites de the 2004 Barco Reale ($9 a glass; 3 a bottle), a Tuscan red with full, rich, plex flavor and port-like overtones, the big and tannic Argentinean 2005 inda malbec ($8; $36). More modest, Talia Rosso Sicilia ($7; $25), a nero ola–cabernet blend from Sicily, showed d fruit and acidity, making it a nice, onably priced house wine. Only the 3 Tenuta Farneta ($8; $33), closed astringent, disappointed. Perhaps it been freshly opened and needed time reathe. On the bread front, during our ts Pops was still experimenting and pping around for a regular bread sup- r. Round, white rolls reminded me of bread that accompanied No. 9 Park's ut several years ago: almost ethereal te bread inside a marvelously crisp t. On a later visit, Pops served rectan- ar rolls studded with fragments of k olives. All the breads came warm n sweet butter.

If any restaurant can survive in this t, which has had four eateries over the 10 years, Pops is the one. It has hed the slightly below-grade space b a lively, engaging bistro. The black- gold paisley-print wall covering above black paneling below the wainscot- give it a sharp, chic look that its im- diate predecessor lacked. Oval-backed chairs upholstered in black-and-white fabric and a Pops logo, marble-top tables, white globe sconces, ceiling fans and "Photo-vu" boxes with continuously changing photographs of old Boston complete the eye-pleasing appointments and décor. An extension of the bar, which seats eight diners in front of an etched-glass window, looks into the kitchen and turns cooking into a spectator sport. In an inspired touch, benches for patrons awaiting their tables furnish a tiny courtyard outside the front door.

Service at Pops, with one unfortunate exception, was first-rate—informed, efficient, attentive and friendly. The exception occurred one night when our order was delivered to the wrong table, and the diners at that table, perhaps oblivious to what they had ordered, accepted it without comment. Our waitress, who had acquitted herself admirably on a previous visit, apparently froze when she discovered the mistake and hoped ignoring it would make it disappear. (I know the instinct, having succumbed to it myself on occasion.) We sat waiting and waiting, and finally asked to speak to the manager. He investigated, explained what had happened, apologized profusely and adjusted our bill accordingly. The incident left my enthusiasm for this engaging eatery undiminished and I returned the following week for a splendid dinner, expertly served. IB

Brant Brings It

From Club Café to Caliterra...

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Like a movie extra, Caliterra Bar & Grille in the Financial District's Hilton takes up space in a great location without making much of an individual impression.

New executive chef Julia Brant, best known around town for a stint as executive chef at Club Café (and formerly head restaurant chef at the Copley Plaza Hotel), plans to be an ambitious agent for change: She wants to make Caliterra a star.

How will she know when she's succeeded?

"When I see the line out the door, the one-and-a-half hour wait... not that I relish that for the guests!" says Brant, who recently left her executive chef position at the Black Cow Tap & Grill in Hamilton after nearly three years. Already, she's drawn new customers who enjoyed her food at Club Café and the Black Cow, and she's renewing acquaintance with "some of the folks [who] worked at the Copley Plaza when I did. That was the first job I had in Boston, after working with Peter Platt at Wheatleigh in the Berkshires," she says.

Although the menu won't be completely revamped for another month or so, Brant is running multiple specials, such as a grilled T-bone veal chop with morel sauce over lemon risotto with fresh thyme.

And her signature appetizer—a "lobster cosmopolitan"—is an attention grabber. "It's delicious, very dramatic," says Brant. "I don't think a lot of people know about Caliterra, but I know I'm going to change that."

Caliterra chef Julia Brant

B&G = Barbara & Grill

If you're disinclined to cram a clunky grill onto your cramped city deck, check out Grill Nights at B&G Oysters Ltd. in the South End. Every Tuesday evening, chef-owner Barbara Lynch cooks up a special grill menu at her raw bar and seafood hot spot, featuring items such as Hawaiian fish tacos, whole grilled Maine lobster and Block Island swordfish with toasted corn salsa. Non-fish-eaters can opt for grilled sausages from the Butcher Shop or choices from the regular menu.

Who You Callin' Coho?

Sure, all salmon—even the bland farm-raised fish—is full of heart-healthy omega-3 fatty acids. But wild salmon is full of flavor, and each species has its own distinctive taste and texture. Right now, the wild-salmon season is under way in the Pacific Northwest, and although it's usua preferable to eat local fish, we recomme a trip to McCormick & Schmick's, West Coast connection, to sample wh ever's on the roster: deep-red socke fine-textured Coho (when it's in seaso or big-daddy king salmon, which weigh up to 60 pounds.

The Perfect Swarm?

You may have heard about a possible vironmental crisis afflicting honeybe called "colony collapse." Is it affecti hives and honey production in our gion? Is that why pastry chef Molly Ha son—of Excelsior, Grill 23 and Ha vest—isn't offering her signature hon enhanced sweets on the current dess menu at Excelsior?

No need to panic, according to Ha son, whose beekeeper father instille love of honey in his daughter from early age. "My dad doesn't seem too w ried about it," she says, noting that m of the affected colonies are located major agricultural areas, where it's lieved they're exposed to a termite pe cide that ruins their homing instinct. for that dessert menu: Chalk up change to the roster of desserts created Hanson's pastry sous chefs, who kept kitchen buzzing during her recent ma nity leave. iB

Riesling's Riddle

BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.

For the riesling-addicted, life used to be easy. There were two prime sources, Germany and Alsace, and although the bottles they produced looked enough alike to confuse casual wine-drinkers, the sublime liquid inside tasted completely different. In a nutshell, the German wines were sweet, delicate and flowery, and the Alsatians tasted dry, full and earthy. If you understood these simple truths, you knew what you were getting and never had to guess.

Fast forward to 2007, when more than half of the wine that Germany produces is labeled "trocken" (dry), "halb-trocken" (semi-dry) or "classic," which translates to relatively dry. Many of the greatest producers from Alsace now regularly venture over the edge of the dry/sweet continuum and, depending on the vintage, are making wines that feature more than a hint of sugar. The fact is, today both German and Alsatian wines are better than ever, but as a consumer one has to wonder: What's going on? The label is no longer the infallible guide it once was for fans.

If you like the bone-dry Alsace style of yesteryear and you don't want to pay a lot of money, the good news is that there's a whole range of moderately priced, reasonably available wines that fill the bill. In the interest of making it easy again, the following recommendations are those that stood out in our recent blind tasting of dry Alsace rieslings, with the wines listed in ascending order of preference.

Charles Koehly "St. Hippolyte" Riesling, 2004 ($21). With fresh apricot, peach and floral scents, this wine smells like it will taste gentle and delicate. On the palate, however, it has a bone-dry, green-fruit edginess that's appetizing in the mode of an Ehrhardt but with perhaps just a hint more flesh. Its bold flavor profile, mingling Granny Smith apple and ripe lemons, suggests pairing with dishes ranging from charcuterie to smoked fish to baked halibut.

Lucien Albrecht Riesling "Reserve," 2004 ($16). If you like the understated side of the Alsace riesling equation, this wine's a bargain. No fireworks, nothing extreme, but great balance: crisp, fresh, subtle, apple-like fruit, pear undertones, with a dry, minerally flavor that lingers into the finish. There is a purity and directness about the flavor profile that suits this riesling for accompanying mild-tasting salads as well as poached scallops.

Willy Gisselbrecht Riesling, 2005 ($11). Yes, $11. This is a steal. Brilliantly perfumed with a peachy floral fragrance, hints of grapefruit, sweet herbs and an engaging yeastiness from the lees aging, it's medium to full on the palate. The delicious golden-apple and pear flavors are finished off with a salty, mineral-edged tang that would suit this wine for everything from raw oysters to a seafood stew.

Kuentz-Bas Riesling "Tradition," 2005 ($15). An impressive wine in every aspect, including the value that it offers. There's a whiff of candied lemon that leaps from the glass and entices you to explore further. When you do, you can expect to find an uncommonly full-bodied, round-textured, almost viscous riesling (this, after all, is the notoriously ripe 2005 vintage), with tart, green-tinged, lemony fruit flavors and a finish so thrillingly long it leaves your palate quivering for food. Not bad for 15 bucks. Simply broiled lobster comes to mind, but you can drink this with anything. Just drink it.

Domaine Zind Humbrecht Riesling, 2005 ($21). The most prestigious estate in Alsace has been one of the prime advocates o "letting the wine make itself," meaning a hands-off approach that in some vintages will produce sweet or even very sweet wine. A few vintages back, the estate began to label all of its wines according to their relative sugar content, a consumer-friendly tactic I would encourage others t follow. This blended riesling is classified as a 1, meaning it's the driest of the wines the estate makes. Although I marginally preferred the 2004 (because of the more intense acid structure), this wine is a beauty in every regard. Ripe and zesty, its gentle flavors lend a whole new dimension to the term "minerality" when applied to wine There's a purity and warmth here that would adapt this well to an herb-rubbed roasted chicken with Meyer lemons, or a king crab witl aioli dressing. Steve Carell (left) and Morgan Freeman star in Evan Almighty

THU./JUNE 21

Movies: Carell Cares

A few years back, when we first heard rumors of a potential Bruce Almighty sequel, we were skeptical to say the least. But once we got word that the centerpiece of said sequel was Steve Carell's quirky newsman Evan Baxter, that uncertainty was replaced by wild anticipation. And here's the best part: On June 21, as Evan Almighty prepares for its nationwide release, Carell will return home for the local premiere. The event, called A Premiere Cause, takes place at the Regal Fenway Cinema and gets under way with a cocktail reception at 7 pm. At 8 pm, Carell will take the stage to introduce the film. All you have to do is sit back and laugh. Proceeds benefit the Zachary Carson Brain Tumor Fund and the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. Regal Fenway Stadium 13, 201 Brookline Ave., Boston (617-332-0728). www.jimmyfund.org/premiere. 7 pm. $75. —RL

CityScope: Take Me to the River

Picture this: a stage, music and thousands of people dancing to "Twist and Shout." No, we're not talking Ferris Bueller's Day Off, we're talking the annual Cambridge River Festival. All day long on the banks of the Charles, you can catch dance performances from hip-hop to ballet at the twist stage and music from gospel to global at the shout stage, plus jazz and other acts at a separate Regattabar stage. In addition to the boogying, this Saturday bacchanalia presents poetry, crafts, art installations and international foods. So pull out your shorts and shimmying shoes, and head to the river. Memorial Drive between Western Ave. and JFK St. Cambridge (617-349-4380). www.cambridgeartscouncil.org. 12–6 pm. Free. —AK

Tastings: If You Dare Wear Short Shorts

Of the many annual reminders that the summer has arrived in Boston, including Fenway Fever, trips to the Cape and rats in the Common, Chefs in Shorts remains one of our favorites. This year's event kicks off June 22 at the World Trade Center's concourse, and for the 10th consecutive summer a slew of local chefs will be sporting seasonal togs while serving up a mean menu of barbecued goodies. The lineup boasts more than 20 first-rate cooks—including Prezza's Anthony Caturano, Dante's Dante DeMagistris and Sibling Rivalry's David and Bob Kinkead—manning the grills while patrons sample an assortment of beer and wine. Proceeds from the event benefit the Greater Boston Food Bank and its fight to end hunger in eastern Massachusetts. Concourse at the World Trade Center East, 2 Seaport Lane, Boston (877-732-7678). www.seaportboston.com. 7–9:30 pm. $60. —RL

Music: Pops Goes Pop

Ben Folds only got the party started; throughout this season, the Boston Pops continues to present acts that appeal to the MTV generation. Their annual EdgeFest features Canadian alt-country rockers the Cowboy Junkies and M. Ward, a vocalist/guitarist touring this summer with Norah Jones. The concert series also brings a DJ to Symphony Hall to perform a "symphonic remix." Call all the cool kids. Just don't expect a congregation of screaming Ashlee Simpson fans outside. Symphony Hall, 301 Mass. Ave., Boston (617-266-1200). www.bso.org. Cowboy Junkies: June 23, 8 pm; June 24, 7:30 pm. M. Ward: June 26 and 27, 8 pm. —AK

CityScope: Bookworms, Re-Joyce!

If your first experience with Ulysses was anything like ours, it wasn't a pretty one. How's a high schooler supposed to stay focused on a difficult, 1,000-page tome when more important things, like Sega and Saved by the Bell reruns, are screaming for attention? But now that we're older and (a little) more mature, it's time to give James Joyce's classic novel another chance, and there's no better time than Bloomsday on June 16. Held at Boston College's Bapst Library, the celebration of Joyce's masterpiece features a crew of local celebs, including comedian Jimmy Tingle, NECN's Jim Braude and actor Annette Miller, taking the stage to read from the tome. And ADD-afflicted attendees needn't worry: Readings will be separated by musical interludes, with beer, wine and other refreshments available throughout. Bapst Library, 140 Comm. Ave., Chestnut Hill. www.ncacboston.org. 11 am–6 pm. Free. —RL

A Mighty Heart, Indeed

Angelina Jolie shows pathos as the widow of slain reporter Daniel Pearl.

BY SEAN BURNS

With all the tabloid attention lavished upon Brad's divorce, the multiple adoptions and her tireless relief work in faraway lands, it becomes quite difficult at times to tune out the media circus and remember that Angelina Jolie also happens to be an actress, and often a very good one.

Granted, since winning the Oscar in 1999 for her live-wire, star-making performance in Girl, Interrupted, Jolie has certainly wasted a lot of our time in junk like the Tomb Raider movies and assorted crummy serial killer flicks, but that's more of a testament to how befuddled Hollywood executives are by strong, attractive women not cut out for Kewpie doll girlfriend roles. (The same thing happened to Ashley Judd, who is just now starting to re-emerge on the indie circuit.) Jolie's presence is often too large, too wild, just too damn much for the puny projects she's saddled with.

But one of the many shocking things about A Mighty Heart, director Michael Winterbottom's tough-minded, no-nonsense adaptation of Mariane Pearl's heartbreaking memoir, is the way in which it reveals a side of Jolie we've never seen on screen before. Playing the widow of slain Wall Street Journal reporter Daniel Pearl might seem like a prime opportunity for the star to indulge in some shameless capital-A "Acting" and probably land another Oscar for the mantle, but instead Jolie delivers a performance that's astonishing in its subtlety and control. She's dialed down her natural histrionics and gone for something much quieter and deeper than expected.

It's a good fit for the movie, as director Winterbottom deliberately avoids putting any sort of Hollywood gloss on this real-life tragedy. Following the example of Paul Greengrass' lacerating United 93, A Mighty Heart tells a horrible story with an awful outcome, and in such cases perhaps the best, most respectful thing a filmmaker can do is simply lay out the facts as dispassionately as possible and try to stay out of the way.

Photographed in jittery, handheld digital video by cinematographer Marcel Zyskind, the film takes a fly-on-the-wall, almost-documentary approach, explaining very little for the benefit of the audience, instead asking us to jump right in and start sorting things out for ourselves. We begin with the bustling, overcrowded city of Karachi, Pakistan, in January 2002. The world is still reeling from the attacks five months earlier, and the Pearls are staying in a gated estate with Indian reporter Asra (Archie Panjabi) while Danny (Dan Futterman) chases down a story related to attempted shoe-bomber Richard Reid. We follow Danny until a taxi drops him off at a village restaurant, and then he simply vanishes.

The extremely pregnant Mariane tries to hold herself together, but between the lines Jolie conveys her palpably mounting dread. Winterbottom's film quickly shifts gears into an electrifying police procedural, as multiple international law enforcement task forces and agents descend upon Asra's home, ripping phone lines from the neighbors and transforming the house into a guarded op-center fortress. Nobody's naïve enough to imagine that there will be much in the way of interagency cooperation, especially since the Pakistani big shots initially consider the kidnapping to be a conspiracy by the Indian government, and there's a breathtakingly condescending token appearance from the FBI. Misinformation almost instantly floods the mass media, as the hostage is accused of working with everybody from the CIA to the Mossad, and our wonderful 24-hour cable news channels have the unseemly habit of reporting Pearl's death without checking their facts.

Angelina Jolie portrays Mariane Pearl in A Mighty Heart.

With a massive amount of methodical detail, A Mighty Heart charts just about every blind alley, dead end and bureaucratic stumbling block in the Pearl investigation. The lead is finally taken by a terse, hardened Pakistani cop known only as Captain, played here by Irfan Kahn, who earlier this year gave the only credible performance in Mira Nair's The Namesake. Kahn's a fascinating choice for the role, with his slight, bookish build offset by a slightly scary, steely-eyed determination. Captain's given some extra-jurisdictional assistance by the great B-movie actor Will Patton, appearing as one of those ex-military "security experts" who has the shady, experienced aura of someone you probably don't want to ask a lot of questions.

Jolie's Mariane occupies the center of this swirling activity, putting on a brave face of serenity while falling apart inside. Her relationship with Danny is sketched out in quick-cut, elliptical flashbacks that build in intensity as the prospects of a happy ending grow dimmer. The filmmaking matches the restraint of her performance, as Mariane's rare breakdowns are shot either from a discreet distance or in almost total darkness.

A Mighty Heart even finds a smart way around the notorious video of Pearl's execution. In keeping with his stubborn refusal to sensationalize these events, Winterbottom wisely sticks to reaction shots and avoids the tastelessness inherent in any re-enactment. This is a sobering, respectful picture that, by paying tribute to Danny's life's work and Mariane's resilience, somehow ends on a note of hard-won hope. IB

Black Book ★★★½

Fiendishly entertaining and extremely nau Paul Verhoeven's Black Book is a rousing, rip ing adventure told in brightly colored, Golde of Hollywood broad strokes. It's a wild, hammy shamelessly melodramatic and quite shame enjoyable. But just when you're beginning to der if a movie about World War II genocide ha business being this much fun, the film's wicke terness leaves an aftertaste. BOSTON'S BEST 2005
IMPROPER BOSTONIAN

Ashley Judd is more than just a pretty face in William Friedkin's thriller Bug.

Bug ★★★★
Winner of the international critics prize at last year's Cannes Film Festival, director William Friedkin's rattling return to greatness has been foolishly mis-marketed as some sort of schlock horror film by the studio that brought you Hostel and Saw. Somebody should sue for false advertising. Adapted from Tracy Letts' off-Broadway play, Bug is a nerve-jangling, narrowly focused chamber piece about a guy and a girl losing their minds together in a dingy Oklahoma hotel room. Ashley Judd finally lives up to her early promise, delivering a performance of sweltering intensity as a battered, druggy housewife who shacks up with Michael Shannon's twitchy Gulf War veteran and slowly begins to share his schizophrenic delusions of government conspiracies and mysterious, hungry aphids. A kaleidoscope of post-millennial paranoia, Letts' screenplay ping-pongs between the hilarious and the harrowing, while Friedkin's assaultive shock-cuts and insidious sound design ratchet the tension to almost unbearable levels. The Exorcist director hasn't helmed anything with this kind of confidence since 1985's To Live and Die in L.A. It's a searing descent into a psychological hell; tough to sit through, and even tougher to shake off. (At Boston Common, Fenway and the suburbs.)

Hot Fuzz ★★★
A cheeky, affectionate British send-up of Hollywood's testosterone-crazed summer action extravaganzas, Hot Fuzz stars cowriter Simon Pegg as a tough-talking, no-nonsense supercop transferred to the sleepy country town of Sandford. Much like these same filmmakers' Shaun of the Dead, Hot Fuzz is a movie made by and for people who've seen way too many movies. The humor lies not in the actual gags, but in the way the flick mimics every stale action-movie trope of the past 15 years, transposing big-gun macho moviemaking techniques from countless urban adventures to a quaint little rural village. It's best viewed as a collection of inside jokes, and buffs can spend hours afterwards pouring over all the little winks, nods and references. Director Edgar Wright has really done his homework here, using just the right syncopated crash-cuts, bombastic hero-worship camera angles and comically overblown explosions. After seeing Hot Fuzz, I doubt it'll be possible to keep a straight face during a Michael Bay movie again—assuming one could ever do so in the first place. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Knocked Up ★★★½
Lewd, crude and straight from the heart, writer-director Judd Apatow's follow-up to The 40-Year-Old Virgin stars Seth Rogen as an endearing, juvenile slobbo who gets a little more than he bargained for after a one-night-stand with an out-of-his-league knockout played by Grey's Anatomy's Katherine Heigl. It doesn't take a genius to map out exactly where Knocked Up is headed; sooner or later o will figure out the frog she slept with is actu prince, but he'll have to put down the bong a up off the sofa before that can happen. The pleasures of the film are the bawdy humor and dant warmth with which Apatow carries his cl ters to their obvious destination. In case th didn't tip you off already, this is one terri raunchy movie, rife with R-rated banter and nounced fascination with bodily functions. bright core of generosity shines through; p not since There's Something About Mary has edy so deftly maneuvered between scatolo sweetness. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Lives of Others ★★★½
Turns out East Berlin wasn't such a nice place in 1984, a year presumably chosen with a wink smile by first-time writer-director Florian H Von Donnersmark as the setting for this eerily breathtakingly suspenseful yarn. Ulrich Muhe ers a performance of brilliant restraint and co a ruthless Stasi true believer, suddenly disco glimmers of a long-dormant conscience wh signed to shadow a fundamentally decent play (Powers Boothe look-alike Sebastian Koch just might be aiding and abetting some sub pals during those dark days before the wal crumbling down. Reminiscent of Francis For pola's The Conversation, The Lives of Other clammy paranoia and creeping dread, with poker-faced turn somehow giving you eve and nothing at the same time. It's rivetin watching a man discover just how badly hi have been twisted and perverted by power-m ing thugs in high places; enough to ca through this otherwise crisp, understated p weird determination to offer more false endin The Return of the King. (At Kendall Square, C Corner and in the suburbs.)

The Namesake ★★

Presum- he first Disney movie to ever open with the ex- ecution-by-hanging of a small child, At World's End juggles so many ludicrously over-elaborate shifting alliances and triple-crosses, it's hard to feel any affection for a cast composed of double-dealing snakes. Depp hams it up with extra vigor in multiple incarnations, seemingly acknowledging that the novelty of this particular performance already wore off a couple movies ago. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Shrek the Third ★½

I remain mystified by the appeal of these awful pictures. Maybe it's the murky colors and putty-ish, slapdash animation, or perhaps just my personal aversion to the lazy anachronisms and instantly dated pop-culture references employed by these screenwriters in lieu of actual, you know, jokes. Whatever the case, this listless third installment of the grouchy green ogre's misadventures lacks the energy to even be as annoying as its predecessors. The movie just lies there like a bump on a log. Mike Myers again ladles on a hacky Scottish accent, dripping with self-regard, going through the motions while Shrek faces impending fatherhood, career troubles and a mid-life crisis; stuff that's doubtlessly fascinating to the children in the audience. Eddie Murphy and Antonio Banderas try valiantly to provide comic relief, a tough gig when you don't have any punchlines. Justin Timberlake joins the team as a young "Artie" Pendragon, but the movie can't even muster enough interest in Arthurian legend to go anywhere with this promising idea. It's just sluggish, droopy and dead. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Spider-Man 3 ★★

The received wisdom in Hollywood about sequels is that bigger is always better. That might be true if you're making pictures based on Disney theme-park rides, but such massively scaled productions seldom allow for the awkward little grace notes of humanity that have thus far personified Sam Raimi's Spider-Man series. Boasting no less than three deadly supervillians and an endlessly convoluted plot, Spider-Man 3 doesn't need a director, it needs a traffic cop. The screenwriters, including Raimi, his brother Ivan and Oscar-winner Alvin Sargent, eventually find themselves buried under so much exposition, Peter Parker has to watch a recap of the film's second act on the TV news. Honestly folks, if you need to summarize about an hour's worth of plot mechanics by having your hero tune into CNN, then there isn't going to be room for the wit and humor of those two earlier movies. Spider-Man 3 proves that sometimes more is a heckuva lot less. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Fresh Pond and in the suburbs.)

28 Weeks Later ★★★
This cracklingly nasty and politically pointed follow-up to Danny Boyle's 2002 shocker 28 Days Later kicks off six months after Britain was ravaged by a killer virus that turned the infected into super-speedy, flesh-munching zombies. Director Juan Carlos Fresnadillo takes the helm this time around, detailing the ill-fated U.S.-led reconstruction effort. Faster than you can say "mission accomplished," the disease comes roaring back through "the green zone," and underfunded grunts find themselves in a quagmire, fighting a whole new kind of urban warfare. Subtle, the film is not. But despite a few regrettable lapses in logic, 28 Weeks Later has a malicious sense of urgency and a bracing hopelessness. Trainspotting's Robert Carlyle heads the cast as a devoted dad who lost his nerve at the wrong moment, and Fresnadillo helms some genuinely harrowing set pieces, including one underground nightvision doozy and a firebombing of almost operatic despair. The best zombie pictures have always used the undead as a pretext for social commentary, and it's heartening to see one as plugged-in and pissed-off as this. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Waitress ★★★
Already shaping up to be the summer's sleeper hit, the directorial debut by indie-movie darlin enne Shelley has a loopy comic charisma th both ingratiating and unique. Former Felic Keri Russell delivers an unexpectedly sassy dearing turn as a long-suffering, put-upon wai a small-town pie diner, aghast to discover th been impregnated by the whimpering, abusive a husband (Jeremy Sisto) she was planning ing. Some big decisions loom on the horizon, comes an awkward affair with her OB-GY pricelessly deadpan Nathan Fillion). Waitr small, screwy crowd-pleaser, full of exagger cents and quirky interludes, and it's largely ca by some tart, pitch-perfect performances. Sc stolen left and right by Curb Your Enthusiasm's Cheryl Hines, and Shelley herself appears as wallflower. But the best of the bunch is An fith, playing a curmudgeonly customer full o fully delivered insults and downbeat sentime happy-go-lucky fatalism epitomizes this scra ture's rough-hewn charm. Rage Unplugged Guitar alchemist Tom Morello finds his folkie muse as the Nightwatchman.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

The sudden noise on the phone is more cacophonous than the guitar sonics that Tom Morello unleashed with Rage Against the Machine and Audioslave. "We're driving down the street and there's this huge parade, like a demonstration, coming the other way," Morello says from Berlin. "Wherever the Nightwatchman goes, protest seems to follow."

Granted, the Nightwatchman—Morello's alter-ego as a solo acoustic activist—strives to generate his own fair share of protest. "The goal from the outset was to be the black Woody Guthrie, but I'd settle for falling somewhere between Johnny Cash and Che Guevara," says the guitarist, the day before performing at a mammoth G8 protest in Germany.

An acoustic activist, Tom Morello plays protest music

Of course Morello is used to facing stadium-size crowds with a band. Rage Against the Machine just reunited for the first time in seven years to rock California's Coachella festival and will play four July/August dates on the Rock the Bells Tour in New York and California (they may play more U.S. shows this summer, he adds).

It's much different, however, getting onstage with only a nylon-string acoustic, a harmonica and your voice. Yet it's become more commonplace for Morello, who plays June 27 at T.T. the Bear's and Aug. 4 at the Newport Folk Festival—oddly on a jam-heavy bill with the Allman Brothers Band.

"It was time to reclaim Newport for protest music," says the Nightwatchman, who has toured with hardcore punk bands and hip-hop acts in addition to a Michael Moore speaking tour. "One thing this whole Nightwatchman experience has taught me is to be completely fearless in whatever venues I would play.... I've played these songs while tear gas was wafting overhead. So I'm not afraid of a few jam-bands."

Morello conceived the Nightwatchman in 2003, he says, when playing in Audioslave and doing political work through the Axis of Justice organization he cofounded with System of a Down's Serj Tankian weren't enough. "I needed to find a way to express my point of view in the music." So he turned acoustic singer-songwriter, playing open mikes, Billy Bragg's Tell Us the Truth Tour and hundreds of benefit shows and union rallies. And after the 2004 presidential election, Morello says, he knew he had to make a record.

One Man Revolution finds Morello echoing other deep-voiced singers such as Cash, Leonard Cohen and Bruce Springsteen, whose Nebraska is a clear influence. But he brings personal perspective to songs like the title track, where he makes mention of a noose he found in his garage as a 13-year-old in his ironically named hometown of Libertyville, Illinois.

"I was literally the only black kid in an all-white town," says Morello, now 43. "It was those early experiences of witnessing hatred and injustice that helped fuel my fire, and I'm swinging back as hard as I can as a grown-up."

He came from an activist family. "My mother was involved with the civil rights movement, and while I didn't grow up with my dad, he was involved in Kenya's struggle for independence from the colonial British," says Morello, who studied political science at Harvard (while practicing guitar four hours a day), graduated with honors and spent two years as senator Alan Cranston's scheduling secretary in Washington, D.C. "I got to witness firsthand what the electoral system looks like up close and, trust me, you don't want to see the sausage being made," he says. "I knew then that I'd definitely be working outside that system."

Instead, he cofounded Los Angeles rock-rap pioneers Rage Against the Machine, splicing heavy chords with innovative guitar tricks that mimicked a DJ, until frontman Zack de la Rocha quit after four CDs. The remaining trio evolved into Audioslave with ex-Soundgarden singer Chris Cornell, making three records before Cornell departed in February, clearing the way for both a Rage reunion and a busier Nightwatchman.

"The times demand music that speaks in an unflinching way," says Morello, who rewires Rage's "Guerilla Radio" as a solo blues. "I'm open to playing rebel music from any genre, and Rage Against the Machine is certainly not exempt."

And fans shouldn't be surprised to see the rock alchemist unplugged. "The only guitar I have in my home is a nylon-string acoustic, and it's the guitar I wrote my heavy rock riffs on as well as my Nightwatchman songs," says Morello, who spent his teenage summers as an acoustic troubadour at a Renaissance fair before getting "energized by the merging of great rock and righteous politics in the Clash.

"One of the benefits of the one-man revolution is that it's guerilla music in its purest sense," he says. "I could be sitting in my home and get a call from friends who need a benefit concert for bail money, and I can just pick up my guitar and go." iB

Are you ready to CLOSE THE DEAL?

BECAUSE WE ARE, AND HERE'S WHY...

1. The Improper Bostonian's 16th Annual Boston's Best issue presents the ultimate in food and drink, shopping services, sports, entertainment and more. It's got everything you need.

2. This is our biggest and most popular issue of the year, and is enjoyed by over half a million readers. That's a lot of potential business.

3. It has a special distribution of 100,000 copies, 15,000 more than usual. Those are extra sets of eyes on your ad.

4. It will be on the streets an extra week, for a total of three weeks. That's more bang for your buck.

5. People hold onto it all year long. That's what we call shelf life.

JUNE 13 – 26, 2007 BY ROCKIE GARDINE

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

The best birthday present you receive this year might be a greater shock than seeing a bunch of familiar faces yelling, "Surprise!" A challenging assignment, a higher calling or a chance to explore a place you've longed to visit? If none of the above, you could still be thrown for a loop, in a good way, when the Gemini sun contacts inventive Uranus and artistic Neptune. Despite your Mercury ruler's change of direction June 15, because you're familiar with what may happen the usual retrograde hassles shouldn't hold you back.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

It makes no difference what your gender is; this week father-son issues carry a hefty amount of weight. Not simply because another Father's Day is on the horizon, but because this year it's possible to benefit from the rewarding trine between paternal Saturn in your Leo house of values and adventurous Mars in your Aries midheaven. Some Crabs will profit financially by maintaining their independence; others could find a way to reconcile experimentation with tradition. Athletes, shrinks and cooks have the best shot.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

Suggesting to a well-meaning Lion that setting limits is the best course may have worked last week, but now that enthusiastic Jupiter isn't such a compelling force, the updated advice is to go for it. A favorable trine from ballsy Mars may be able to penetrate the conservative stance Saturn has imposed while it's been in Leo for the past two years. No matter how this ultimately rewarding situation comes about, you won't see anything like it for another 30 years. The new moon arrives with a well-informed colleague in tow.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

Another week of excitement and/or tension, depending on how much is at stake. If you're making a desperate attempt to succeed, having the media-friendly Gemini sun at the top of your solar chart could be your ally. If you're counting on your partners' support, make sure that their contribution remains within the realm of the possible. Too weird, too wired, too far ahead of the curve can be a problem that won't get solved for another month or so. Remember: your Mercury ruler goes retrograde June 15 for three weeks.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

If your partner seemed overly optimistic last week, this week the pendulum swings the other way—not quite into depression, but toward a sobering awareness of the way things tend to work out. Call it the voice of experience or Saturn's steadying influence on impulsive Mars in your Aries marriage house. This rewarding relationship can lead to an artistic project or a deeper commitment to a sports team and its glamorous star. Should a talented loved one, e.g., the child prodigy, figure into the scheme of things, so much the better.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

When it entered your Leo midheaven two years ago, disciplined Saturn became more involved in the development of your career, helping you form and, more important, solidify connections to powerful people. This week your energetic Mars coruler perfects its rewarding trine to Saturn. Also this week, your other coruler, cautious Pluto in your Sagittarius house of income earned and treasures acquired, is exposing you to the wide range of possibilities that the versatile Gemini sun knows so well. Ain't synchronicity grand!

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

If you've been waiting for the other shoe in the apartment above yours to drop, you won't have to wait much longer. The disturbance suggested by unruly Uranus taking up residence where you reside could be set off during a challenging square from the Gemini sun. But before you blame your partner for making things worse, consider t upside: Any change might turn out to be for the best. There's only so much time one can spend hanging on tenterhooks. Mercury being retrograde discourages sign any agreements until mid-July.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

The instrument of your good fortune might turn out to a relative, Home Depot, the gardener or a realtor. But n matter how it manifests, be grateful for the rewarding trine between assertive Mars in your Aries home base ar your Saturn ruler—especially since Saturn is in your house of other people's money, in luxury-loving Leo, no less. Mercury's retrograde trip through your Cancer complement lasts from June 15 until July 9 and can affe relations with coworkers, health professionals, pets and partners.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

The last part of solar Gemini can be especially beneficia because the creative sun in your house of recreation tea up with imaginative Neptune in Aquarius. Although the favorable trine aspect is an annual event, this year guts Mars adds stronger motivation while protective Jupiter provides advisors worth their salt. So, will you direct al this positive planetary energy into a project, or will you happier if it simply polish up your aura? FYI: The Gemi new moon could introduce a new love interest or two.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

What merely circled around you last week, when the su provoked unpredictable Uranus in your sign, may hit h this week. By now you could have reacted to the event all due speed, and might currently be experiencing the positive effects of the Gemini sun's favorable trine to yo Neptune ruler. But if you're not certain about your leve commitment, wait to see what the Gemini new moon brings in.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

Here's another promising forecast, perhaps with better odds of success than the one based on prosperous Jupit optimistic vision. This week Rams are urged to follow th respectable, realistic advice Saturn offers as it trines yo impetuous Mars ruler. Because Saturn's wealth of experience is being filtered through Leo, you should get share the Lion's fondness for luxury. Now, while Mars is still in Aries, don't pass on any opportunity that'll incorporate your engaging personality and remarkable chutzpah.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Even if it makes you feel uncomfortable, when the sun your Gemini house of assets, such as talent, favors imaginative Neptune in your career midheaven, you're likely to be inspired. How this positive connection betw money and name recognition will pay off is anybody's guess. While the sun illuminates, Neptune tends to confound. Mercury turning retrograde in early Cancer f June 15 to July 9 could mess with communication and transportation matters for Bulls born in April, finances those born in May.

Cruisin' on Empty

To the guy who drives the Ferrari down Newbury every Saturday: Your car is sweet and all, but seriously, every time I'm there I see you driving up and down the street, and it's kind of sad. Hate to break it to you, but we all know what a Ferrari looks like. Take that thing where it was meant to be driven, and stop wasting its horsepower.
—Shopper

It's Just Not Fare

To MBCR: Where are the improvements we've been promised? In January, when you jacked up fares by two bucks, I swallowed it because I hoped I wouldn't have to deal with overcrowded trains, cranky conductors and endless delays. Well, I'm still riding the Worcester Line twice a week, and it's the same thing day in and day out. Your reasons for delays crack me up. Last week it was the heat. The week before that, mechanical problems. And my personal favorite—CSX speed restrictions—is a classic. But those hilarious cop-out explanations still don't explain why I'm getting home 30 minutes late every day. And do I even have to complain about the conductors? Never was there a more surly bunch in powder-blue shirts and sunny hats. They say, "You're going home. What's the big deal?" without so much as an apology for the delay. The big deal is, I used to pay five bucks for a ride and $60 for a 12-ride pass. Now, it's $7.50 a ride and $90 for 12 rides! I think I'd jump off the train willingly if I saw the cost for a monthly pass. Yet I bite my tongue because I've got no other way to get home, as the conductors so humbly remind us. Thanks for taking even MORE of my money and giving nothing back in return.
—Low Rider

Monkey Luv

Dear Monkey: Happy two-year anniversary, honey! I love you, and I can't wait for everything we're going to do together. The past two years have been amazing, and we've had a lot of fun. Thanks for sticking with me and always being there for me. I hope you know how important you are to me. I love everything about you—even the way you try to purposely annoy me (because you love me, of course). I'll always be here for you. Happy anniversary, sweetie.
—Mushroom Cup

Looking for Mr. Goodbar

Dear Hot Cappuccino: I'm writing in response to the recent IMPROPER Impersonal you addressed to your Almond Joy. I hate to be the bearer of bad news, but I think you're getting played. You shared some sweet moments, even some intimacy, but listen—while you're at home sleeping alone, Almond Joy is running around on you. All that sugar you thought was just for you is getting spread around—to your stomach, your butt, your thighs—and it ain't pretty. Yeah, coconut is great. But I couldn't stand by and watch Almond Joy run through yet another lover. I had to stand up and say something. And who am I? I am a health counselor. I am a friend who's here to tell you that enough is enough, and that you can find someone better for you. Because you can. And how do I know? I used to see Almond Joy, too. There. The truth is out. I knew Almond Joy real well, and I got played, too—until I turned the tables and grabbed Almond Joy by the nuts. And I have to tell you, I'm better off for it.

Commuters Gone Wild

To the frantic Commuter Rail riders sprinting from the subway during rush hour: I understand that you must catch your train. I understand your disdain for the possibility of having to wait around for another one. Is it necessary, though, to mow down everyone else in the process as if you were a pack of antelopes trying to elude a dangerous predator? I'm fortunate enough to live a few minutes from the T station. I get off the train, and I'm tired. I don't want to run with the herd, and yet you find it necessary to follow as close to my backside as possible as I ascend the stairs, urging me to move faster. You consider it acceptable to jab me as you run by, bags and limbs flailing around you. Although most likely unintentional, a quick apology wouldn't hurt as your jagged elbow bangs into my arm. Even when I think I've safely made it to the exit turnstiles, I still have to reach the stairs leading aboveground, which requires cat-like reflexes to move through the heart of the herd. Try to be conscious that not everyone is rushing toward the Commuter Rail. Shockingly enough, I'd rather not have bruises when I leave the T.
—Ducking for Cover

Supersoaked

To the soaking-wet boy I passed on Berkeley Street at 9:15 the morning of June 4: Honey pie, if I knew your name and address, I'd send you an umbrella. I have to admit, though, I'm a sucker for the wet-and-miserable look, so if the "I'm so cold, please warm me up" stare was intentional, well done. I pass you a lot of mornings and always wonder where you're coming from. By the looks of your rain-saturated jeans, it seems you've got a long walk. I'd like to know more. And I'm serious about the umbrella. Being that you appear to be as young and poor as I am, I'm hoping that a $10 model from CVS will suit you all right. What's your favorite color?
—Dry and Lonely

Salad Dish

To the vapid girls at Au Bon Pain trading boyfriend "horror stories": While you picked at your salads (dressing on the side, natch), you tried to one-up each other with your tales of clingy, controlling boyfriends, all the while thinking that borderline-stalker behavior somehow translated into your being the two most desirable people in the 617. It may come as a shock, but if your "boyfriend" can't handle your going out a couple nights a week, it's got a whole lot more to do with his insecurity and your being a raging slut than it's got to do with your perceived market value. Do the city of Boston a favor and take your egos to Vegas.

At the Wild Gala, top row: Margo Howard and Ron Weintraub. Middle row: Eileen Patterson, Jane Denis and Joan Parker. Bottom: F. Lee Bailey and Robert B. Parker

WHAT THE WORLD NEEDS NOW IS JEWELRY, SWEET JEWELRY...

Despite rave reviews, few people know about the New Rep Theater, but that's undoubtedly about to change, due to the Wild Gala it threw to coincide with its production of The Wild Party.

Dinner was held in the Commander's Mansion of the old Watertown Arsenal, followed by a live auction and performance in the company's nearby theater. The guestlist included legendary lawyer F. Lee Bailey, philanthropic miracle worker Joan Parker and her husband, mystery scribe Robert B., advice columnist (and daughter of Ann Landers) Margo Howard and her cardiothoracic-surgeon husband, Ron Weintraub, arts boosters Edgar Knudson and Louis Mula, charmant hotelier Serge Denis of the Langham and the unspeakably lovely Jane, interior designer to the stars Eileen Patterson, stallion and tie designer Tony Corey and the dashingly handsome C.J. Menard, and others of an equally bold-faced ilk.

Award-winning Broadway composer Andrew Lippa entertained with musical numbers, along with members of the company, while members of the audience bid many thousands of dollars for items like having a character named after them in Parker's next Spenser novel.

As for witty persiflage, one very elegant woman wearing blinding diamond earrings given to her by a practice husband and a ginormous gold and diamond bracelet that once belonged to Gary Cooper's wife said, "I figured I'd wear black and bling. I think I'm doing a public service."

DOUBLE STANDARDS?

The fistfight seen 'round the world (thanks to CNN and Youtube) might have been entertaining in a neanderthal sort of way, but it was by no means the highlight of Opening Night at Pops.

There was the reception beforehand, and the show put on by Lockhart & Co., which included a raucous half-hour set by Ben Folds (in all probability the only man ever to sing the word "asshole" in a sustained falsetto at Symphony Hall), not to mention a sumptuous post-concert dinner for major donors and bigwigs at the Copley Plaza, where (truth be told) everyone talked more about the fight than the concert. (Then again, it isn't every day you see a guy throw a haymaker in the second balcony—as someone wrote in a letter to the editor, "I went to Symphony Hall and a hockey game broke out.")

Witnesses included the statuesque blonde Beth Johnson and her husband, Rob Ketterson, BSO board chair Ed Linde and the soignée Joyce, Peter Fiedler (son of the Pops patriarch), cochairs Beth and Carmine Martignetti and Megan and Robert O'Block, high school music teacher and honoree Ben Das, the incomparable Marion Kassler, velvet-throated radio deity Ron Della Chiesa and the scrumptious Joyce, broadcasting legend John Henning, and one man who flailed desperately, trying to catch a waitress' attention and saying, "If I'm going to sit through an Andrew Lloyd Weber medley, I'm going to need alcohol."

Despite a lot of uninformed blather about an uncouth younger crowd resorting to violence in the otherwise sacrosanct Symphony Hall, it turned out to be a middle-aged drunken man who picked the fight with a younger guy who simply asked him to be quiet. When all was said and done, the most intelligent question that arose from the evening came from an owner of multiple bars and nightclubs, who wondered whether there would be a patron-on-patron licensing hearing, referring to the alcohol licensing board's inconsistent and capricious way of penalizing bar owners every time there's a dust-up between customers. As of press time, there was a citation from the police, but no hearing had been scheduled.

BRAILLE IS BEAUTIFUL...

You could have lit up Vegas for a month or so with all the wattage that turned out for the Possibilities Gala to benefit the Perkins School for the Blind.

Corinne Grousbeck and her husband, Celtics owner Wyc (whose son Campbell attends the school), got all of their high-powered, deep-pocketed friends to attend, among them: Celtics legends Tom Heinsohn and his lovely wife, Helen, Danny Ainge and his other half, Michelle, Walter McCarty and the lovely Erin, Bob Cousy and his missus, Missy, team co-owner Steve Pagliuca, Blue Cross big Charlie Baker, office supplies mogul T Stemberg, son of a Speaker man T O'Neill, WAAF morning mouth G Hill, concessions gazillionaire Joe O'D nell and the delightful Kathy, night impresario Patrick Lyons and his Kristina, Lycos founder and venture talist Bob Davis with the delectable R ubiquitous party pair Beth Dickerson David Drubner, stunning blonde B Madison with her husband, Chris, rea tate princess Amy Jacobs and m player Terry Stanley, opera star and designer Erik Lautier and Christ Driscoll (who runs Bono's clothing li and real estate magnate Steve Karp the supercool Jill.

The rock band Sister Hazel (friend Grousbeck, who sent his jet to fetch t in Florida) performed, and Channe vixen Lisa Hughes served as emcee though the evening's real stars were students, teachers and the school itself.

As one guest put it, "You know place is amazing because most of the p ple who are here every day can't even s and it's still unbelievably beautiful." ■

The Kelly Automotive Group Offers Answers to the Frequently Pondered Questions of Car Buyers.

In a world when the internet offers an array of endless automotive data, there are still fundamental questions consumers struggle with every day. So, Brian Kelly, President of the Kelly Automotive Group has produced a series of videos that answer some of these questions, in a detailed, yet easy to understand manner, without a business agenda.

There are four such videos...

- Lease Or Buy
- Best Way To Finance
- How To Read A Car Ad
- How To Choose A Dealer

"I am asked these questions everywhere I go," Brian Kelly explains. "It's time the public has a professional and inside explanation. At first glance, it would be logical to assume these videos are elongated Kelly commercials, but refreshingly they are not."

All four videos are there for your viewing pleasure, right now, at kellyauto.com

CLOSE TO HOME

If you're seizing the summer, you probably have at least a couple of trips on your calendar for the next two months—a chance to blow out of town and take in some fresh scenery while the weather's at its best. But even if your free time or vacation funds are tight, there's plenty of fun to be had that doesn't require an overnight trip.

Why not start in your own backyard, by playing tourist in Boston's suburbs? We made our third venture into the land of strip malls and plentiful parking and found four more towns worth checking out—new faces, cheaper everything, need we say more?

As for outdoor pursuits, you don't have to rent a cabin to be at one with nature; we show you spots to hike, raft, trail run and more, all within an easy drive. Meanwhile Ezra Dyer hits the local theme parks, rating their thrill quotient. As the saying goes, it's never too late to have a happy childhood.

SHIP SHAPE

I just finished reading Ezra's column titled "Hole in the Water" (June 13) and can't wait to show it to my husband. We just bought a boat this summer. We kicked off the first weekend of using it with a phone call at 10 pm from the Coast Guard that it was "taking on water"! We're new boaters, but even we realized that's not a good thing! Thanks for the laugh. We'd be happy to take Ezra and the lovely Heather Michelle out, if that dream becomes a reality.

—PARRISH BLASZKA
Andover

I was reading Ezra's column last night on the T around 11:30 pm and felt compelled to tell him he must buy that boat. I'm one of those boaters you see puttering past Castle Island, and there's nothing like it. Now, as to why I was on the T late on a school night reading the magazine? It was a boat-related pain in the ass moment… but it was painless when you factor in that I spent last Thursday through Monday morning on the boat, taking it out, hanging out with friends, etc. Boating is the best way to spend a summer. And by the way, tell Ezra there are still slips available at the marina for this summer. I'm sure Heather will forgive him.

THE WORD

So Very French

Cigarette smoke may be the only thing missing at Gaslight, the Aquitaine Group's newest restaurant in the SoWa section of the South End. When it comes to authenticity, the guys behind Union Bar and Grille have left nothing to chance. From the décor to the food to the service, the place says Paree. Not white gloves France. Simple, hearty France. This is a brasserie through and through.

"We want to transport people," explains Christopher Robins, a managing partner and executive chef who has manned the kitchens at Metropolis and Armani cafés. The trip begins at the entrance, where a zinc bar greets patrons. Imported from a town outside Paris, the bar took some 40 workers to install in the 220-seat restaurant, opening in late July. Details like subway tile, frequently found in a brasserie, and antique light fixtures add to the French feel.

Salade niçoise

Saumon filet rôti

Christopher Robins

The menu tells the same story. The hors d'oeuvres, including soupe à l'ail (garlic) with mussels and saumon (salmon) fumé, are quintessential brasserie. So are the prices ($4.50–$8.50). Entrées like poulet rotisserie (roast chicken) and steak frites get the job done for under 20 bucks. Crepes flambé is one of many desserts that cost only $6. The wine list is strictly French, with glasses starting at $4.

But perhaps what struck Robins most during a whirlwind tour of these unpretentious restaurants in France was the service. He plans to replicate the style at Gaslight. Take choucroute (an Alsatian dish of sauerkraut and sausage). As in Paris, he'll present it in a dish, propped over a heating rack that sits on the table. "You don't see that anywhere here," he says.

The Aquitaine Group believes that level of attention, combined with affordability, will pay off. "A brasserie makes sense in this neighborhood," says Matthew Burns, who conceptualized the spot with partners Seth Woods and Jeff Gates. "It's not a place you'd put a four-star, Michelin restaurant." Also catering to the locals will be Green Light, a takeout counter next door offering sandwiches and salads. For South Enders, c'est si bon. Gaslight, 560 Harrison Ave., Boston (617-422-0224). —Megan Lisagor

All-American rock legend John Mellencamp perform with the Boston Pops July 4. From there, he prepares t hit the road and continues work on… Broadway's nex big musical. Yep, you read that right.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: So you're headed to the Hatch Shell. What's your favorite Boston venue to play?

John Mellencamp: The old basketball arena, the Bosto Garden—but you guys tore it down almost 15 years ago

IB: Any Boston show that stands out in your memory?

JM: The big outdoor one, Great Woods [Tweeter Cer ter]. I played there two days after Sept. 11. A lot of peopl were canceling shows, and I said no way. When 9/11 hap pened, I was in Montreal and couldn't get back into th country [by plane]. I had a show in Boston and so w drove from Montreal to do it.

IB: You joined your first band, Crepe Soul, at 14 and later formed a cover band called Trash. Care to share a few word with the next generation?

JM: The music business has changed so much since started out. I will say one thing, though: There's nothir that replaces hard work. When I started out I was playir the clubs 300 nights a year… night after night after nigh That's how you get good, that's how you build a fan bas IB: You formed Farm Aid in 1985 with Willie Nelson and Neil Young. How's that doing?

JM: I [announced] June 11 with Willie and the may of New York that the next show will be [there] in la September.

IB: Are you also getting ready to tour this fall?

JM: Well, at 55 years old you have to prepare your boc When you called, I'd been working out.

IB: Any plans for a new album?

JM: Still working Freedom's Road. When we go on tour i gonna be for 10 months, and it's gonna be the Freedon Road tour. So we're gonna re-release the album, ke workin' it, keep pluggin' away, baby. You just keep plu ging away until the next thing comes along, and you that and that's it.

IB: Which, to our surprise, is a musical with Stephen King. What's the deal?

JM: We're convening in New York on July 8 to workshop it. We've hired a director and are looking for actors and actresses.... It's a work in progress. —Jess Del Balzo

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

TASTY TIDBITS

Coming and Going

People Are Talkin'... The space that formerly housed Bomboa (before it was bought and closed last winter by the owners of neighboring 33 Restaurant) is on the verge of reopening, we hear. The place will be renamed 35 Stanhope Street—that's also the address—and should be ready to roll by summer's end. As that door opens, another one may close. Come Aug. 31 the Armani Café's lease is up—and potentially won't be renewed. No word yet on what will become of the Newbury hot spot, but we'll keep you posted.

Armani Café

Apron for Business... When Beacon Hill's Paris Creperie closed last April (for the record, we knew they were doomed when they eighty-sixed the überpopular Ellen's Celebrity crepe from the menu), the neighborhood was left to wonder what would take over the giant Cambridge Street space. Cease wonderment. By the end of June, BH residents Danielle Fishbein—who formerly worked as a pastry chef at Radius—and Rodrigo Tomas plan to open the Spotted Apron, a new high-end bakery and café. Along with specialty coffees, the spot will serve simple fare like quiches, paninis and empanadas. 326 Cambridge St., Boston (617-624-9700).

Smashing Success... After months of preparation, the Hard Rock Café officially opens for business July 2 at its new Faneuil Hall location. And they'll do so in rocking style. The launch festivities will include the simultaneous smashing of 71 guitars (Hard Rock International was born in 1971) against the Clinton Street loc tion, and celebrity smashers inclu Mayor Menino, former New Kid Jord Knight and the IMPROPER's own Ez Dyer, who adores breaking things. T transplanted Hard Rock, occupying t space that used to house the Rack, w have 500 seats plus a live music area. 24 Clinton St., Boston (617-424-762 www.hardrock.com.

A Real Original

We love trendy ensembles as much as the next style slave. But sometimes we cr distinction, eclecticism, artistry. That's why we welcome Mahri, a Newbury bouti with jewelry and clothing that's just a little bit different. It's the third shop owned Mahri Anagnostis, a Wellesley-born and -bred jewelry designer. With two location the North Shore, she's ready to conquer Boston, led by her daughter Aimee Bod South Ender by way of Bergdorf's (where she was an accessories buyer). Bode culled independent designer labels from New York, Los Angeles, San Francisco, L don and Paris ($100 to $1,000). She offers a selection of interesting but infinitely w able pieces that cater to a larger age range, as Newbury has more than its shar shops for PYTs. The décor blends a sleek luxury vibe (acrylic chairs, modern light with the warmth of highly polished wooden floors and a carved mantelpiece, c plete with candles. Well-lit glass cases highlight Mahri's jewelry designs, handcrafte hammered gold and silver and encrusted with precious and semiprecious sto ($150 to $10,000). The result is luminous. Mahri, 215 Newbury St., Boston (617- 0110). www.mahrijewelry.com. —Marni Elyse Katz

Ice Cold

Ice cream and summer go way back. Take a modern spin on the season's favorite treat with these funky flavors. Vanilla and chocolate are so last year.

Emack & Bolio's
Emack & Bolio's has dubbed this the "summer of love." Their corresponding flavor combines vanilla-bean ice cream with homemade chocolate pieces that spell out "L-O-V-E" in the pop-art style. $3.50–$4.85.

Herrell's
15 Dunster St., Cambridge (617-497-2179); 155 Brighton Ave., Allston (617-782-9599). www.herrells.com.
Not one for roughing it? Herrell's brings the best part of the camping experience to you. Their chocolate-based s'mores contains all the essentials: Hershey bar, marshmallow and graham cracker. $3–$5.

JP Licks
JP Licks has a slew of seasonal flavors. Our favorites have to be Lumpy Primate (fresh banana ice cream with walnuts and chocolate chips) for the name and mojito sorbet for the buzz. $2.99–$4.75.

Lizzy's
29 Church St., Cambridge (617-354-2911); 367 Moody St., Waltham (781-893-6677). www.lizzysicecream.com.
Lizzy's kiwi sorbet takes the fuzz and fuss out of enjoying that furry fruit. Create your own "fruit salad" by adding a scoop of their cantaloupe ice cream. $2.95–$5.04.

Picco
513 Tremont St., Boston (617-927-0066). www.piccorestaurant.com.
Though the flavors rotate regularly and are more fresh than funky, we can't resist Picco's seasonal selections like strawberry-blackberry. $3.33–$5.95.

Toscanini's
899 Main St., Cambridge (617-491-5877). www.tosci.com.
Who says avocado's just for guacamole? Not Toscanini's. The shop offers the buttery flavor in both ice cream and sorbet forms. $3.75–$6.75.

Baubles That Don't Break the Bank... Jewelry stores generally fall into two categories: those with museum-like display cases and 6'5" security guards, and those with mass-produced items adorning the walls in a tangled mess. Cambridge's Zinnia is an exception, and it's about to make shopping on Newbury a lot cheaper. Opening its third location (the second is in Burlington, Vt.) this month, the shop's affordable, hand-crafted jewelry is delicately strewn across upholstered tables, with one-of-a-kind pieces you'll love to sift through. It's like hitting an estate sale and paying garage sale prices. Zinnia, 172 Newbury St., Boston (617-247-2222).

With the arrival of You, a funky clothing and accessories line, throwing a trendy tunic in the cart with your window treatments suddenly makes perfect sense. The family-owned store is also introducing jewelry, totes, bags and bath products this month, all for under $100. Time for you to look as great as your living room. *1063 Mass. WHAT FORE?

Look out, PGA. I'm taking golf seriously now.

I have a permanent handicap when it comes to playing well-heeled games. My parents were hippies and consequently had no interest in the sports of the white-collar, capitalist world. This was fine with me, because my own inclinations ran to the redneck end of the scale, and there's no excuse for boredom when you can walk out onto your own land with a lever-action .308 and blast holes in an abandoned VW bus. But when I got to college and discovered that while I'd been shooting things and crashing snowmobiles everyone had been skiing and playing golf, I realized I had some serious catching up to do. Right now, with two seasons of dust on my skis, I've pretty much made up my mind that driving to a mountain to fall down and be cold isn't for me. Golf and I, on the other hand, have reached a dangerous stage of our relationship: I'm beginning to take it seriously.

Up until very recently, I always adopted a detached/ironic point of view when it came to golf. I never kept score, and my main priorities were driving the cart and drinking beer. That's the great thing about golf: Even if you're completely inept, you're still outside on a nice day drinking beer. This is the kind of sport I can get behind, one where a fat guy like Angel Cabrera can beat Tiger Woods in the U.S. Open while chain-smoking butts between every hole.

In my golf career, I've hit a ball backwards, I've bombed the hood of a passing pickup truck at Pinehurst, and I've teed off only to see the head of the driver travel farther down the fairway than the ball. I never wanted to be the guy with the fancy equipment who completely stinks, so I always maintained low overhead—I may play golf like Michael Jordan played baseball, but at least my shoddy gear lets people know I'm not here for the birdies, I'm here for the beeries.

But sometime over the past couple years, I began to care about how I played. First, Heather got me lessons at Citygolf, which may have had something to do with the fact that her father told me that we couldn't get married until I could break 100. I always took pride in the fact that my hand-me-down clubs look old enough to be in a lithograph of a bunch of Scottish guys wearing knickers, but last year I bought a fancy carbon-fiber driver, the sports equivalent of Mr. Magoo buying a Lamborghini Murcielago. And instead of wearing sneakers, I bought golf spikes. Of course, I held on to my favorite golfin jorts, for matters of style and performanc

I began this year about as awful as ev Somehow, though, I started to improve mere total mediocrity. Last weekend, made it through nine holes with n buddy Elliot and his friend Kevin a realized that I hadn't lost a ball. As usu I wasn't keeping score, but Kevin i formed me at the turn that I'd shot a 4 Now, for all you non-golfers out there 49 is not great, and I apologize for ev talking about golf scores, because talki about golf scores is as annoying as havi Rihanna for a speech therapist. (Chil "Umbwella." Rihanna: "Try again. I 'Um-burrrr-ella-ella-ella.'") But you ha to understand that for me, shooting a over nine holes is like running a fou minute mile or dunking on Paul Pierce. long ago made up my mind that I was ways going to be a double-par kind of g and that was OK. This changed thin This offered the glimmer of hope that o day, I could play a dollar-a-hole skins ga and not owe $18 at the end. Maybe I co only owe $16.

At the end of the round, Kevin talli the scores and I shot a 50 on the back ni For the first time in my life, I broke 1 Also, I only drank seven beers, so y know I was taking this thing seriously.

Despite my newfound awesomeness golf, I'm happy to say that my talent has poisoned my carefree attitude toward t game. I still hit when it's not my turn. I s don't know what the numbers on the ba mean. I still don't own a shirt made Ping, nor a golf-themed coffee mug. my sub-100 round did get me thinking– I can do that with Bagger Vance–era clu what if I actually bought my own irons? used new balls instead of ones I find in t woods? It might be time to finance equipment upgrade. Anybody want to b some skis? iB

The Ugly Kid Factor

Not even sports fans are immune to its effects

Ugly Kid Factor isn't something most people would readily admit to experiencing, but most probably have.

UKF happens when you're sitting on a plane and feel a kick in the back of your seat. You turn around to see what happened, and there's a cute kid smiling at you. Maybe it's the little guy from Jerry Maguire. Suddenly, your back pain isn't so annoying. You think to yourself, "Aw, he knows how to kick. He's just being a kid," and go about your business.

But let's say you turn around and Stewie Griffin or Augustus Gloop is looking back at you. That happens and you instantly start bitching about how you're stuck in front of some nasty baby, and spend the next four hours thinking of ways to slip an Ambien into his drink. (Note: No, of course I'm not talking about YOUR child.)

I know I'm guilty of it, and I know I'm not alone. Two similar actions elicit completely different reactions, and it's all because of UKF. And guess what? The epidemic not only haunts planes, restaurants and family reunions; it also pervades sports.

Manny Ramirez might be the defining UKF catalyst in Boston sports history. When he's in a slump (which doesn't happen often) or demanding a trade (which does), the term Manny Being Manny assumes an awful meaning. Fans start lamenting how his head's not in the game or how he doesn't run out grounders. But when he's on a tear, the same crowd can be heard in the stands hysterically laughing and yelling, "Look! Manny just threw the ball into the Monster Seats, and there's only one out! That's Manny Being Manny!!" He's the same weird guy, doing the same moronic things, but when he's playing well, nobody cares.

This season, the most drastic case has to be Julian Tavarez, who aside from Manny, easily does the most seat-kicking on the team.

He's constantly running his mouth, throwing at batters and celebrating himself on the mound. And last year, I hated him for it. Last year, he was truly awful. He made a nice little run as a starter at the tail end of the season, but that was meaningless. When it mattered, he was at his worst, and quickly joined the likes of Reggie Jefferson, Heathcliff Slocomb and Mark Guthrie in the pantheon of my least favorite players in Sox history. Fast forward to 2007, and this is not the same Tavarez.

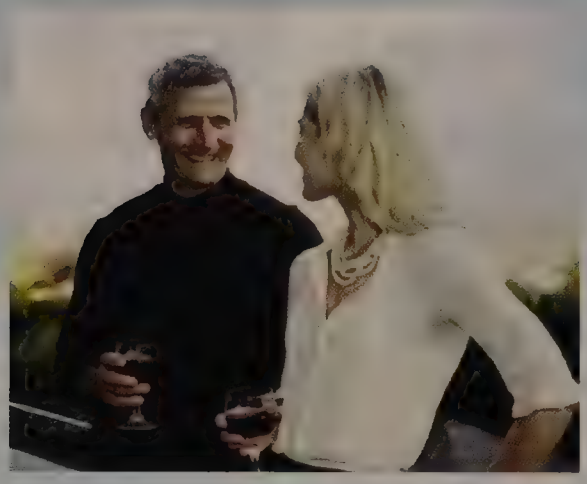
When Jon Papelbon moved back to the bullpen after Spring Training and Jon Lester wasn't able to return as quickly as the te once thought, a rotation that was suppos to be unbeatable took a pretty big hit. Tavarez has come in and done someth pretty remarkable.

His ERA might be a little higher tha was last year, but that's skewed beca most of the runs he gave up in 20 weren't his own. And even though he go only about six innings or so per start, something the Sox can deal with, cons ering how well the bullpen is pitching.

His 4-4 record isn't stellar, but seriou this is Julian Tavarez we're talking abo The guy's won twice at Yankee Stadiu He's beaten the Tigers 2-1. He's also lo tough 2-1 decision in the Metrodo These are the top teams in the AL a Tavarez goes out nearly every time and gi the Sox a chance to win. And with the consistencies of Wakefield, Schilling a Dice-K this season, that means a lot.

But best of all, now that we don't have deal with Incompetent Julian, we're gett the chance to appreciate Insane Julian.

NOW THAT WE DON'T HAVE TO DEAL WITH INCOMPETENT JULIAN, WE CAN APPRECIATE INSANE JULIAN



I was at the game the other week w he beat the Giants 10-2 (another imp sive seven inning performance) and it a fricking circus. He danced around Elaine Benes after big outs, went nuts a strikeouts and, of course, performed his nature roll-the-ball-across-the-grass first-base routine. Everyone loved it. cluding me. It's the same stuff that dr me insane last season, but now that emerged as one of the unsung heroe 2007, it's amazing to watch.

So, Julian, enjoy your newfound adm tion. You've earned it. But if your game south, be prepared for the wrath of U Well, unless you feel like donning s glasses, putting on some pudge and te everyone you meet that the human b weighs eight pounds. IB

THE DANCE

BY JOHN D. SPOONER

Fun in the 'Burbs

The lights go down and the wild times begin

Into the 1970s one of the most popular movies was Bob & Carol & Ted & Alice. It was about wife swapping. Rumors and legends of this activity, mostly in the suburbs, were rampant at the time, particularly the stories of guests at certain parties who'd throw their car keys into a pile, choose a set while blindfolded and then go home with the owner. Most of this actual activity, as I observed it, ended in tears, acrimony and divorce. No one ever told me that the sex was worth it and no one has ever said to me, "Boy, those were the good ol' days."

At the time, a friend in his 20s told me about his 40-something parents, who had invented in a Western suburb what they called "the Game." Here were the simple rules: five or six couples arrived for drinks and dinner. And drinks. And more drinks as the evening progressed. After dinner the guests would assemble in the living room, and the host and hostess would shut off all the lights after drawing the curtains. Then everyone would mill about, as Sinatra records played in the background. The host would bang on a highball glass with a spoon and everyone would take off all their clothes. After that, it was every man and woman for themselves. Multiple divorces also resulted from this sport.

My wife and I were at a 30th birthday bash during this time when the seven-year itch kicked in. The Seven Year Itch was a movie about a married man who gets itchy for Marilyn Monroe, who was not his wife. At this birthday party at least two couples not married to each other wandered off to different parts of the house (one part was a squash court) for adventures that probably didn't involve checking out photos of the host as a high school athlete. My wife and I escaped—although not without several raiders throwing shots across her bow. "Phew," she said when we were safely in the car. "Wouldn't you love to know what the people there are going to say tomorrow when they wake up?"

"I already know what they're going to say," I said. "They're going to say, 'Holy shit.'" It was the only grown-up birthday party I've ever seen where apology letters flew for several weeks afterwards.

But one of the really good things I learned at a suburban dinner party was a different kind of game, good for up to 10 people. The organizer would take a yellow legal pad with a pen or sharp pencil. That person would put down beginnings of a dialogue between two characters like this:

Romeo: "I'm looking at your legs fro where I stand beneath your balcony."

Juliet: "My legs are not what you shou be looking at. You should be staring in my mind."

Romeo:

At this point, the writer folds the pap over after Romeo's first speech so that cannot be seen, then passes the pad to t next guest. That person writes Romeo line, Juliet's response, then Romeo's nam folding again to block their first Rom speech and hands it off again. When ever one has had a turn, the total scene is re out loud, usually with much glee.

After years of fun and games in t
'burbs, my wife and I finally decided th there was a complacency out there, a c tain unattractive smugness about "havi arrived" that we wanted to shed. Seve things triggered this. One was a dinn party given by a pair, big in Boston med who offered "after-dinner mints." Tho were lines of coke their guests snorted mirrored coffee tables on the way to t 10-person hot tub. We're not prudes any means, but I have an unwritten ch ter somewhere called "Sloppy Live
There are certain boasts you don't want be caught in. And the same holds true certain hot tubs.

The suburbs continued to make us f ready for a city stage of our lives. My w received a call from a woman who dr one of our kids to school wondering wh one of our sons, then three years old, his expressions. The woman, driving s eral kids to school, said one morni
"We're off." To which our son added, " the bride's pajamas."

And a teacher called my wife to rep on our daughter. She was six at the ti and when asked how her father spent leisure time said, "He watches TV eat celery and dipping it in the salt he put his belly button." Are these reasons to and move to the city? Abraham Linco father used to say, "When you can see smoke from your neighbor's chimney, time to move on." I'm the opposite. I action and people around me.

The city is the place. Friends and ne bors are not so interested in putting other people's clothes in the dark. M of them. iB

HANK PHILLIPPI RYAN

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Channel 7's award-winning investigative reporter Hank Phillippi Ryan has just published her first mystery novel, Prime Time, about an accomplished female TV reporter who discovers the scoop of the century hiding in her junk mail folder.

Born and raised in the Indianapolis area, she attended Ohio's Western College for Women (now part of Miami University) and studied abroad at the International School in Hamburg, Germany. She worked at WTHR in Indianapolis, on Capitol Hill as a legislative assistant to a Senate Judiciary subcommittee and as an editorial assistant at Rolling Stone, writing and editing a column called "Capitol Chatter." She also worked as a reporter and anchor at WSB in Atlanta before joining Channel 7 in 1982. Since then, she has racked up 24 Emmy Awards and a number of Edward R. Murrow Awards for her hard-hitting investigative journalism. She and her husband, attorney Jonathan Shapiro, live in West Newton.

Jonathan Soroff: Let's start with your name. I'm assuming you weren't born a man?
Hank Phillippi Ryan: [Laughs.] My real name is Harriet Ann. My family calls me Ann or Annie. Hank came from college, when someone saw my name and decided it would be hilarious to call me Hank. That was in 1967, and it just stuck.
JS: Writing fiction is a fairly large departure for you. Is it something you always wanted to do?
HPR: My mother always thought I would be a TV reporter, probably because all I did growing up was watch TV—old movies mostly—and I think she was in such despair over it that she was looking for the bright side. I, on the other hand, always thought I'd be a mystery writer, from the time of my first Nancy Drew, which was The Secret of the Old Clock.
JS: So you were a big whodunit fan?
HPR: Oh yeah, from the time I was maybe 7. I loved Nancy Drew. There was also Trixie Belden; Cherry Ames, Girl Nurse… all those teen mysteries I loved. Then I moved on pretty quickly and I read every Sherlock Holmes story that was written, and I devoured Agatha Christie.
JS: So it was inevitable that you'd write one?
HPR: I don't know about that. I'd think about it from time to time and ask myself, "Do I have a good idea for a plot?" And the answer was always no—until about three years ago. I had an idea and I thought, "Ding! Ding!" The little bell went off.
JS: Where do you hope it leads?
HPR: Y'know, in thinking about where it might lead you sorta miss out on where you are, and I can't begin to describe how happy I am with what's happening now.
JS: What's your strongest suit as a reporter?
HPR: I'm good at fitting the puzzle pieces together. When thing A happens, followed by B and C, and there's documents X, Y and Z, I'm pretty good at seeing how it all fits together and what that might mean.
JS: Biggest scam you ever uncovered?
HPR: Well, things that I'm proud of: We found a huge flaw in the state's 911 emergency call system, which got fixed. We found the representation of minorities on federal jury pools in Massachusetts was essentially zero. We uncovered a huge fraud in the way home improvement contractors dealt with homeowners, so much so that at least three laws were changed. We caused a change in condo conversion policies.

"SOME PEOPLE WOULD CONSIDER WHAT I DO A LOT OF DRUDGERY. I THINK OF IT AS TREASURE HUNTING."

JS: Ever fear for your life doing a story?
HPR: Um, yes. In a kind of "It's not really going to happen" way. As a reporter, one of the things you learn quickly is that you never know how angry someone's going to get. But fear for my personal safety is not really high in my spectrum of worries. It can't be to do my job.
JS: But you do some dangerous shit.
HPR: I guess one of the reasons I'm not fearful is that I'm prepared. I know my stuff. I go into a situation—wired with hidden cameras, confronting corrupt politicians, chasing down criminals—but I know the facts and what I'm going to ask. I've had photographers say to me, "What should I do if this guy hits you?" and I say, "Just make sure the camera's rolling."
JS: Your book deals with an aging reporter trying to compete in a young person's game. What's the secret to longevity in TV news?
HPR: Loving your work is certainly a major factor. I think the people that I work for—and last time I counted, I'd worked for 18 news directors at Channel 7—know that I'm there to do good stories. I try to make every story I do—from when I used to cover cat shows to the biggest investigative stories—a jewel that people will talk about and remember.
JS: Greatest lengths you've ever gone to for a story?
HPR: [Laughs.] I've been in disguise. I've worn hidden cameras. I've gone with no sleep for days to track people down. I've hidden in the backs of cars, subsisting for hours on coffee and Swedish Fish. I've skinned my knees on the sidewalk chasing after people. I once had to do a live shot, and a minute before I was on the air, my producer handed me a news release that I couldn't read because I had my contacts in instead of my reading glasses, so I just ripped out a contact and threw it on the ground to read the release with one eye…
JS: From your days at Rolling Stone, what's your best sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll story?
HPR: From my days at Rolling Stone, I don't have one brain cell left. [Laughs.] I went on tour with Hunter S. Thompson—JS: Yeah, so how good were the drugs?
HPR: I never saw any. That's my story, and I'm sticking to it. But Hunter and I got to be real pals. He was one of the sweetest, most thoughtful, funniest, kindest people I've ever met.
JS: One thing most people would be surprised to learn about your job?
HPR: I have learned over the years to put on eyeliner in a moving car. I can eat a salad in a cab without getting it all over myself. Some people would consider what I do a lot of drudgery. I think of it as treasure hunting. Give me a stack of a thousand documents, and I love it. For every moment of glamour, there are 999 where you're freezing, starving, you can't think of the right word. And think about this: In my job, you can never be wrong, you can never be late, and you can never look bad.
JS: OK, a story from history you most would have liked to uncover or investigate?
HPR: I don't lust after stories that were already done, especially the stories someone else did. I just look forward to unearthing the good ones to come. So I'm hoping to be the one who finds Whitey Bulger, or the "real killer" that OJ is looking for.
JS: Story that affected you the most emotionally?
HPR: One is the story we did about home improvement contractors ripping off home owners, and most of the victims were in Roxbury, Dorchester and Mattapan. A lot of families whose homes were being foreclosed on got their homes back; the bank stopped the foreclosure proceedings. It was such a realization that while we're digging for facts and going after wrong-doing, real people are involved.
JS: Do you feel like you stick up for the underdog?
HPR: Yes. No question about it. Giving a voice to the voiceless, or standing up for the little guy… I think the system should work for everyone, and sometimes people don't know what to say or how to say it or who to say it to, or how to get someone to listen. When I call, they listen.
JS: Are you a suspicious person? Do you see corruption everywhere?
HPR: Short answer? Yes. I think everything could be a conspiracy. I think everybody's in on everything. So yes. I'm suspicious. I'm cynical. When someone says "This is how something works," I say "Really? Prove it," or "I don't think so. How can you inspect 6,000 buses when you only have two inspectors? The way the system is set up can't work. So everything to me has a big question mark hanging over it. I'm relentless. It's boring. I'm awful. I'm always looking for a story.
JS: Last question: If I were to investigate you, what would I find?
HPR: Way too many shoes. IB

Summer in the city's all well and good, but Greater Boston has its own delights. By Carmen Nobel and Dennis Fisher. Photographs by Topher Cox and Matt Tueten

IN 1922, THE HISTORIAN LEWIS MUMFORD summed up the American suburbs as being "...without the discipline of rural occupations and without the cultural resources that the Central District of the city still retains." Eighty-five years later, a lot of people still agree with the guy. To folks who dwell within the Boston city limits, the mere mention of the suburbs will conjure up scary thoughts of social death: strip malls and minivans and office parks. Heck, the word itself has an inferiority complex: broken down literally from its Latin and French roots, "suburb" basically means "less than the city." But we're here to tell you that you can't judge a word by its etymology. The truth is that Boston's suburbs offer loads of fun to those of you brave enough to scale these city walls and explore them. So go west, young man or woman! Or south! Or north! Hit the road on any given summer Saturday and have a go at one of the following four towns. You'll find clean beaches, bike trails, jazz concerts, weird arcade games and—wonder of wonders—reasonably priced cocktails. Go ahead. Try the suburbs. You'll like them. Sometimes you want to go where nobody knows your name....

Hull

How to get there: Hull is accessible by car from Routes 3A and 228. It also can be reached by sea on the MBTA Harbor Express; the route includes Boston's Long Wharf Ferry Terminal, the Logan Airport Ferry Terminal and the Hull Ferry Terminal at Pemberton Point. (The boat's a good option on hot summer days, when traffic and parking can be tough.)

Distance from Boston: 20 miles southeast by land, or about five miles (from Dorchester) by sea

Population (as of the 2000 census): 11,050

Note of infamy: Hull is the hometown of Napster cofounder John Fanning.

Fun fact: Hull's Paragon Park amusement park once featured a ride based on the catastrophic Johnstown Flood of 1889.

Fun lie: Hull's Paragon Park amusement park once offered free mustache rides.

Go there for... the beach!

If you're of the mind that life's a beach, then you'll love Hull. Situated on a peninsula at the southern end of Boston Harbor, the scrappy little seaside town features the most popular strip of sand and rock on the South Shore. Hull's beloved Nantasket Beach stretches on for miles; much of it is reserved for residents, but the southernmost mile and a half are open to the public. It's a prime people-watching spot, and it's relatively clean (i.e., cleaner than the rest of Boston Harbor, but not as pristine as, say, the coast of Maine). On hot days, Nantasket draws tens of thousands of sunbathers and swimmers of all ages and shapes. On windy days, the beach attracts some of Greater Boston's best surfers; Nantasket hosts several surfing competitions each year.

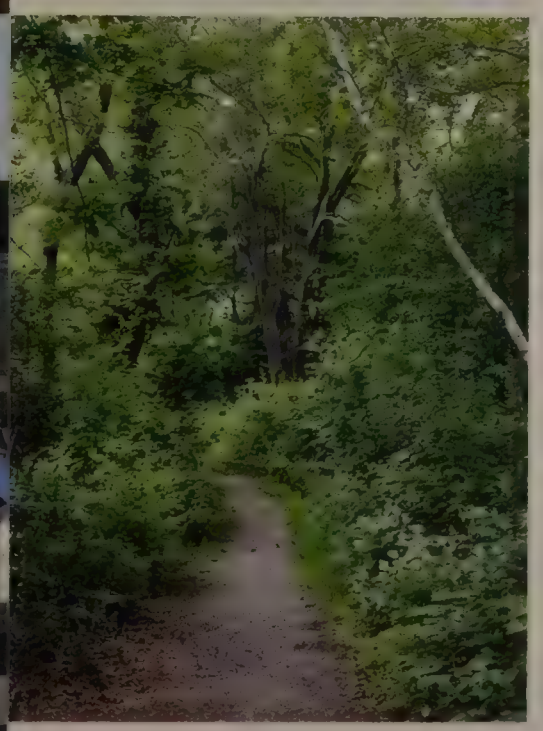
During low tide, the beach offers a multitude of tide pools to explore. During high tide, the southern end of the beach disappears under the waves. This is a good time to scamper up to the seawall above and discover the old-school attractions of Nantasket Avenue—a sun-faded testament to years past. From 1917 to 1984, Nantasket was home to Paragon Park, an amusement park that featured multiple roller coasters and a scary ride called Kooky Castle. Due to weather damage and lack of business, the town has razed most of the fun and replaced it with condominiums, but a few bastions of Paragon Park have survived, thanks in large part to dedicated town historians. Paragon Carousel, built in 1928, is still going strong. The last working carousel in the Boston metropolitan area, it sports a gorgeous scalloped canopy, a Wurlitzer organ and 66 horses—24 of which (and counting) have been restored to their original paint colors. The carousel operates daily from 10 am to 10 pm, Memorial Day to Labor Day, except when the weather is lousy. A few steps down the street you'll find the Playland Penny Arcade, which features classics like air hockey, newcomers like Dance Dance Revolution and head-scratchers like Bones Family—in which, for 50 cents, you can cock a fake rifle and shoot up a prehistoric living room. Next door to the arcade is a whole business dedicated to the Fascination Game, sort of a cross between Skee-Ball and Bingo. The goal is to roll a rubber ball into holes at the end of a narrow wooden table, and the first player to hit five holes in a row wins a prize. The holes light up. It's oddly exciting. Seriously. Hull's Fascination Game—originally installed at Coney Island in 1918 and relocated to Nantasket Beach in 1945—is the oldest one in the United States.

For more serious Hull history, head to the other side of town, toward the point of the peninsula. Hull Harbor sports tricky currents, and the town has seen more than its fair share of shipwrecks. The Hull Lifesaving Museum honors those Hull residents who made a career of plucking scared sailors out of the sea. Housed in the restored 19th-century Point Allerton U.S. Lifesaving Station, it showcases historical lifesaving equipment, lighthouse models, old photographs of notable rescue operations and a video library. Nearby you'll find the Hull Yacht Club—arguably the most unassuming yacht club ever. The antithesis of exclusivity, it's more like a nautical community center. The club shares its facilities with the town so that local kids can learn to sail, and it's produced some great competitive sailors, including MIT sailing coach Franny Charles.

Where to eat: As you might expect of an unpretentious seaside town, Hull houses several unpretentious seafood restaurants. Among the most beloved is Jake's Seafood Restaurant & Market, which boasts ocean views. For an appetizer, try the littlenecks sautéed with chorizo, white wine, red peppe and the house marinara sauce ($10.95). Fo dinner, go for the simple baked scallops (market price) or the generous fisherman's platter—a big ol' deep-fried plate of fresh scallops, shrimp, clams and haddock ($18.95). For a quick bite or a picnic lunch try Ally's at the Beach, a seaside concrete concessions stand that offers Italian ices, a bevy of portable fried seafood options and some kick-ass curly fries ($3.25). For desser stop by the Carousel Creamery, which sell New England-y ice cream flavors such as wicked good chocolate, lobster tracks and apple pie.

Where to drink: Nantasket promises plent of safe bets for getting buzzed by the beach The Red Parrot has live music, karaoke, big deck that overlooks the ocean, top-sh martinis and a decent beer list that incluc Red Parrot Ale. Next door, Barefoot Bob Beach Grill features an island motif, a respectable surf-and-turf menu and a slew of specialty drinks such as Barefoot Bob's Rum Punch (a yummy your-guess-is-as-good-as-mine blend, on the rocks) and Goombay Smash (rum, citrus juice and more rum). But our favorite Hull hooch haunt is Jo's Nautical Bar, the oldest surviving pub in the city, which has been serving Massachusetts mariners since 195 Reachable by land or sea, Jo's sits in a seaside basement in a weathered house o the tip of Hull.

Where to buy a trendy T-shirt from a hometown hero: Just around the corner from Nantasket Beach, you'll find the headquarters of Johnny Cupcakes. Over the past couple of years, the hip T-shirt retailer has become the toast of Newbury Street among the 20-something set, unde the artful eye of 25-year-old founder and Hull native John Earle. Earle's Johnny Cupcakes warehouse store in Hull sells it wares at prices that are slightly lower tha those of its Back Bay counterpart ($35 fo T-shirt as opposed to $40) because rents lower in Hull. In the summer, Earle turns the walls of the spacious Hull store into makeshift art gallery; this year he'll displ the paintings of Boston artist Matt Hook



Marblehead

How to get there: Marblehead sits on the North Shore and is reachable from Routes 129 and 114.
Distance from Boston: 18 miles northeast
Population (as of the 2000 census): 20,377
Freaky film fame: Movies filmed in Marblehead include The Witches of Eastwick, Hocus Pocus and The Good Son.
Fun fact: Marblehead's official town anthem is "Marblehead Forever" by Marcia Martin Selman.
Fun lie: Marblehead's official town insult is "You're such a frickin' marblehead."

Go there for... chilling out!
If you need to take your blood pressure down a notch, head out of the city and up to the well-heeled, sheltered harbor town of Marblehead, which offers sights, sounds and smells that will soothe city-addled souls.

Nature lovers (and people avoiders) should visit the Marblehead Neck Wildlife Sanctuary, an undeveloped woodsy tract of swampland in the center of Marblehead Neck—the chunk of land on the end of the town's isthmus, which is flanked by Massachusetts Bay. The sanctuary trails, open daily from dawn to dusk, are a delight for bird enthusiasts—who often spot yellow-rumped warblers, northern parulas, eastern towhees, rose-breasted grosbeaks, scarlet tanagers and green herons. For everyone else, it's just a nice place to inhale and exhale. Marblehead Neck smells lovely, like lilacs and salt water. And what with the pleasant tweeting and the sound of the ocean breeze in the trees, visiting the sanctuary is like walking around in a living relaxation tape. The 43-acre Steer Swamp Conservation Area, located off Stony Brook Road, is another great bird spot.

If your idea of a soothing birdsong constitutes a Charlie Parker jazz composition, then check out Marblehead Summer Jazz, a series of Saturday-evening concerts that run from June through August in a Unitarian church. In recent years MSJ has drawn jazz greats such as Bucky Pizzarelli and Etta James. Shows this summer include 15-year-old jazz prodigy Grace Kelly (July 21), the Kenny Werner Trio (Aug. 4) and the Donald Harrison Quartet (Aug. 18).

Just want to lie there and soak up some sun? Hang out on Devereaux Beach, which offers clean sand and water, pretty views of the ocean (and of good-looking yuppies in expensive swimsuits), picnic tables, parking and public restrooms. It sits off Ocean Avenue, at the foot of the causeway to the Neck.

Marblehead's known as "the yachting capital of America," and boat enthusiasts will enjoy the beauties in the harbor outside the Boston Yacht Club, which hosts several sailing races each year. Be warned, though: Wealth envy has a way of harshing your mellow.

Where to eat: It's not exactly a foodie paradise, but Marblehead has a respectable mix of casual and fine dining establishments in and around the charming town center. Morning people will like The Driftwood, a rustic, little greasy spoon that serves breakfast "all day," from 5:30 am to 2 pm. The omelets ($3.95–$5.95) are good, as is the lunch fare. Try the pepper burger ($3.40), topped with sautéed red and green peppers. A bonus: Scoffing at the idea that fried dough is just for carnivals, the Driftwood offers a great rendition of the diet-busting treat on weekends for a mere $1.75.

If you like seafood for dinner, we recommend the Three Cod Tavern, which opened this past spring. Go for Hannah's Baked Haddock ($14.99) or the Blue Water Salmon, topped with a lobster horseradish sauce ($13.99). For an appetizer try the popcorn shrimp ($7.99); a guy actually stopped us on the street to rave about it.

For a taste of the North End on the North Shore, visit Pellino's Fine Italian Dining, a well-liked Italian restaurant with a well-balanced wine list. The extensive menu includes a nice grilled calamari brushed with basil olive oil ($9). Vegetarians can go for the eggplant ravioli with caramelized onions and sun-dried tomatoes ($17).

On Devereaux Beach, from April through Columbus Day, you can grab a bite at Lime Rickey's Beach Food, which serves a standard range of fried fast food as well as salads, pizzas and a raw bar. (Oysters on the half shell run $1.75 each.)

Where to drink: The teal-paneled walls and red vinyl seats are fun, and the seafood's pretty good, but the best reason to hang out at Maddie's Sail Loft is the stiff drinks. "We give the heaviest pour in town," says bartender Doug Moss. You'll catch a quick buzz no matter what you order, but Moss recommends Maddie's signatures: an inspired Dark and Stormy ($6.25) and the Thunderdome, which contains vodka, champagne, orange and cranberry juices, and Razzmatazz liqueur ($5.50).

Where to buy an old promotional poster from the movie Captain Kidd and the Slave Girl: Founded in 1899, Sacks Antiques is the oldest antiques shop in Massachusetts. The treasure-packed store specializes in furniture and silver, but its best-kept gem is the charismatic, gravel-voiced owner, 82-year-old Stanley Sacks. He's full of helpful information about both the antiques and the town, and he's a Marblehead mainstay. (In fact, the Driftwood's menu includes a tuna sandwich called the Stan Special.) While Sacks—whose grandfather opened the store—showed us no signs of slowing down (he was reading an IMPROPER when we arrived), he's planning accordingly, expecting a nephew to take the reins eventually. "We have every intention of keeping the business going," Sacks says.

Plymouth

How to get there: Plymouth is accessible from Route 3. It can be reached by train from South Station on the Commuter Rail's Kingston/Plymouth Line.
Distance from Boston: 40 miles southeast
Population (as of the 2006 census): 57,409
Stargazing: Phoenix Farrell of Linkin Park was born in Plymouth.
Fun fact: Plymouth is home to the largest granite statue in the United States, the National Monument to the Forefathers.
Fun lie: Plymouth is America's hometown.

Go there for... the great outdoors!

If they think of Plymouth at all, most people think about its historical significance. After all, Plymouth was once home to the world's longest ropewalk. But Plymouth also is a popular destination for outdoor enthusiasts of all stripes who flock to its sandy beaches, calm waters and the massive Myles Standish State Forest.

Ranked as the second-largest in Massachusetts, the state forest draws hikers, mountain bikers, trail runners and campers most of the year. Once you're inside (enter about four miles west of downtown on Long Pond Road), you could explore for days without ever retracing your steps. The forest has more than 60 miles of trails, including ones for horse owners and mountain bikers.

If the woods aren't your thing, grab your cooler and head to one of Plymouth's many beaches, most of which are open to the public. The largest and most accessible is Long Beach, less than two miles outside town on Route 3A south. For a small fee, visitors can park, spread a blanket and enjoy one of the best views south of Boston. A four-mile-long reef off Plymouth's coast protects the harbor and the nearby beaches from the most severe weather, resulting in calm waters. If you want to go beneath the surface, head to Diver's Market for rental scuba gear, lessons and tips on where to dive. If paddling is more your speed, the folks at Eastern Mountain Sports will set you up with a kayak and other necessities.

The Eel River, which snakes through the southern part of town, attracts locals for fishing, kayaking and swimming. A river in name only, it's really more of a gentle stream that connects a few ponds, but it teems with trout and herring, and the surrounding wetlands are a popular spot for birdwatchers who come to see the osprey, eagles and kingfishers that nest in the area.

You can easily explore Plymouth on foot, but if you go, take your bike. Downtown Plymouth and North Plymouth are terrific locations for an easy ride and parking can be hard to find, especially in tourist season. No bike? Stop by Serious Cycles in Manomet for a rental ($25 per day, helmet included). Once you pick up your wheels, you can ride north on Route 3A back toward downtown, and about halfway there you'll be treated to an amazing view of the Atlantic and some small, coastal islands.

Where to eat: Plymouth's downtown historic district is the main spot for good dining. Local favorite The East Bay Grille has one of the largest menus in town. The tempura shrimp ($10.95) are excellent, as is the lobster pie ($26.95) and chicken marsala ($19.95). Café Strega, overlooki the beautiful Brewster Gardens park, has large menu of traditional southern Italian cuisine. Start with the caprese ($8.95) or the polpette gratinate della casa ($9.95), which will forever cure you of trying to make your own meatballs. The pastas are all as good as you'd expect, and the zuppa crostacei ($21.95) and pollo saltimbocca ($18.95) are standouts among the meat a fish courses.

For lunch, hit The Cuisine of Mark Connolly. The sandwiches are good enough that on a summer Saturday the li is often out the door. But they're worth th wait, with the Grilled Ivan (hot pastrami sauerkraut, Swiss cheese and dressing; $7 being the best of the bunch. For dessert, you can either visit Ziggy's for the best ic cream in town—and chocolate-dipped bananas—or head to The Chocolate Ba for handmade confections, including Sa Adams truffles and Mexican vanilla crem ($16–$23 per pound).

Where to drink: In the summer, you won't find locals at the tourist spots on Court Street; instead they hang out at The Cab Shack, with its decks overlooking Plymouth Harbor. A good selection of dr and bottled beers (UFO, Guinness, Stell Artois and Twisted Tea among them) an tropical drinks menu are the main draws Plymouth's British Beer Company is th mothership of this South Shore/Cape ch attracting a crowd of regulars. For wine lovers, The Vine is a must. Located just downstairs from Café Strega, this cozy w bar has a friendly, knowledgeable staff ar live music most weekends.

Where to buy a vinyl copy of Combat Roc

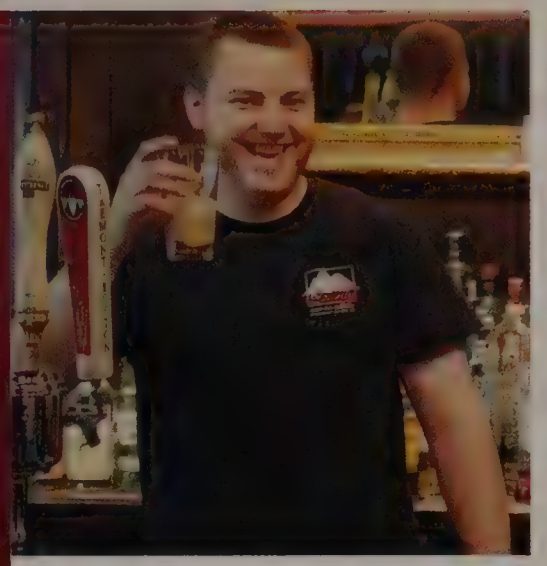
You say your musical tastes run more to early U2, the Clash and the Boomtown Rats than Nickelback, Creed and Carrie Underwood? You'll feel at home at Revo lution. Conveniently located around th corner from the British Beer Company, filled wall-to-wall with hard-to-find use CDs, records and videos. You can find U imported vinyl, classic Miles Davis reco posters ranging from Sinatra to contemp rary artists and biographies of musicians

Waltham

How to get there: Waltham is accessible from Route 128 and the Mass. Pike. It can be reached by train from North Station on the Commuter Rail's Fitchburg/South Acton Line.



Distance from Boston: 9 miles west

Population (as of the 2000 census): 59,226

Fun fact: Dave Scott, commander of the Apollo 15 mission, wore a Waltham watch to watch during one of his moonwalks.

Go there for... the Moody Street crawl!
Waltham boasts two well-regarded private colleges in Brandeis University and Bentley College, and thus (like any good college town) has more than its share of bars. The quality varies from outright dives where your shoes stick to the floor, to high-end bistros with sommeliers and wine lists as thick as Tom Brady's black book. Ground zero for the drinking scene is Moody Street, the main drag through the center of downtown, which probably has more bars per block than any place this side of Key West.

At the upper end of the spectrum is Tempo Bistro, a sleek, swank wine bar and restaurant with a truly staggering selection of wines. The list of pinot noirs is especially impressive. But don't worry if you don't know a glass of port from a USB port. The Tempo staff know their stuff and can find a good bottle in your price range. The vibe here is low-key but hip. Just across the street sits the relative Moody Street newcomer, The Lincoln. With a lounge-y atmosphere, it caters to a young professional crowd, which packs the bar on weeknights as well as weekends. The Lincoln's collection of signature drinks includes some you might've made when you raided your parents' liquor cabinet in high school. If you're feeling adventurous or just finished watching Larry the Cable Guy, try the Redneck's Mimosa, a mixture of Miller High Life and orange juice. Or there's always the Grape Fanta: grape vodka and sour mix. Bands play here a few nights a week, with an eclectic mix of jazz, rock and blues artists taking the stage.

A few notches down on the beautiful-people scale are two favorites among Waltham locals: The Skellig and Watch City Brewing Company. The Skellig, sister bar of Somerville's incomparable Burren, is a classic Irish bar with a few tricks up its sleeve. The atmosphere is friendly and warm, and you'll find the obligatory Guinness and Smithwicks on tap. But you can also order Magic Hat #9, Rapscallion or Skellig Irish Red. There's live music in the back room a few nights a week, and the bar's food menu holds its own surprises, including a tasty chicken curry ($9.95) and a spicy Thai steak salad ($9.95) that's hot enough for any chilihead. Watch City, by contrast, is exactly what you'd expect it to be: a place for beer aficionados and their friends to find standout handcrafted brews. The selection varies by season, but the year-round favorites include Hops Explosion IPA, Moody Street Stout and Titan Ale.

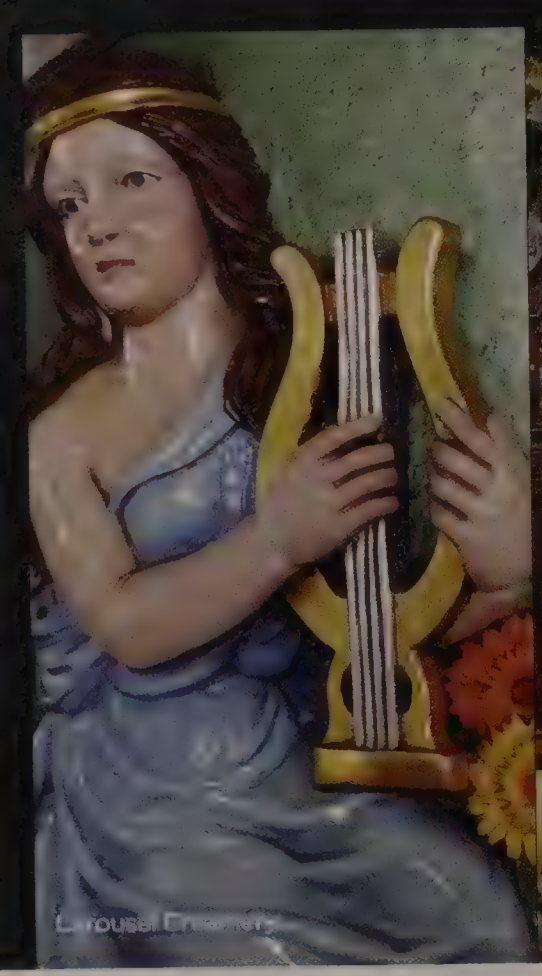
Where to eat: If you're up early—or still awake from the night before—head over to In a Pickle, a breakfast and lunch joint prized by locals for its monster omelets and waffles and low prices. A zesty Spanish omelet will set you back just $5.95. For those who don't wander out into the sunlight till closer to noon, make a beeline for Carl's Subs and Burritos. A tiny shop with no inside seating, Carl's is known for its huge cheesesteaks: The only real decision is whether to order a small or a large. A small packs probably close to a pound of steak, so unless you've been on a hunger strike, stick with that. The locals also haunt classic Mexican cantina Margarita's, where fajitas are the main attraction.



When your sweet tooth flares up, the only place to go is Lizzy's Ice Cream, a Waltham institution famed for wacky flavors (Mad Dog Mango sherbet, anyone?) and a selection of alcohol-infused "adult" ice creams—all homemade—which is obvious as soon as you take the first bite. Try the peanut butter cup with a bit of marshmallow topping and you'll swear you're eating a Fluffernutter.

For dinner, it's hard to do better than Il Capriccio, an upscale Italian restaurant with a small but varied menu. Start with the souffle di porcini ($12), and move on to the gnocchi with lobster and white asparagus ($20 or $30), which comes in individual or family-style portions. For a less expensive option, check out Absolutely Asia, a pan-Asian restaurant as good as any you'll find in Chinatown. Entrées are generally in the $8–$10 range, with generous portions. Expect a wait, though, as the restaurant only has a few tables.

What to do between lunch and dinner: If you're not afraid of a little culture, take a side trip to the Rose Art Museum at Brandeis. The gallery specializes in modern art and, in addition to its permanent collection with pieces by Andy Warhol, Roy Lichtenstein and others, is showing off the work of Swiss artist John Armleder through the end of July. Admission is just $3. After you've exercised your mind, hop on your bike or lace up your running shoes and hit the rail trail that runs along the banks of the Charles through the center of town. Or, if you're feeling frisky, head to Prospect Hill Park and hike up to the lookout station, which has a killer view of Boston on clear days.

Park It

There's no reason that grown-ups shouldn't be able to enjoy roller coasters and waterslides, so we hit up three Boston-area amusement parks in search of scary rides, cold beer and adult-caliber thrills. Story and photographs by Ezra Dyer

By my reckoning, Busch Gardens in Tamp Bay, Fla., is the best amusement park in th world for adults. Sure, Disney World migh be larger, but Disney World is unequivocally aimed at children, in terms of both i wimpy rides and its plethora of endlessly mugging Cinderellas, Mickeys and Goofy Busch Gardens, on the other hand, offers relentlessly terrifying rides, a wildlife safar filled with animals who could tear you lim from limb, and then, to top it all off, an honest-to-goodness German beer garden on-site (after all, this is Busch Gardens). love that place.

Unfortunately, I live about 1,000 miles from Tampa, which renders regular trips t my amusement park Mecca impractical. However, Boston has some serious theme parks in its own right, so I endeavored to take a tour and find out how our local attractions rate when compared with the gold standard—if Busch Gardens is a perf 1.0 on the amusement park awesomeness scale, then how close can our local competition get? Pop a Dramamine and join me my quest for thrills.

COCO KEY

Your first impression at the new $20 million CoCo Key is that you've walked int some kind of watery McDonald's playlan it's all bright colors and cheeriness. Atop looming jungle gym–type structure at the center of the 65,000-square-foot room is giant bucket that fills with 300 gallons o water and tips over every seven minutes dousing everything below. That's a nice touch, but what's in it for the big kids?

Well, there are four water slides, two you ride on an inner tube and two that ride on your own soon-to-be wedgied bu You're not allowed to go head first, but, being an extreme waterslide athlete, I ju in the Barracuda Blast inner-tube slide head-first before the lifeguard can stop m Bad idea: barely 20 feet down, my legs a swinging wide off the back of the tube a giving me abrasions against the sides of chute. So I clumsily try to spin myself around and in the process strain a muscl my back. CoCo Key has already injured It has also won my respect.

The two non-tube slides, Shark Slam and Gator Gush, are unexpectedly quick and, at 286 feet and 275 feet, respectively give you a decent amount of ride time in exchange for your three-story climb to th top of the tower. They're not exactly as scary as the waterslide at Atlantis in Na that shoots you through an aquarium fil with sharks, but they're not glorified Sli Slides, either.

Further helping the grown-up fun quo tient is a string of poolside cabanas that can rent out, à la South Beach. Each ca ana includes a fridge and a flat-screen T There's also the Palm Grotto indoor/out door spa, where you can access the outd whirlpool via a swim-through passage. I don't know about you, but just hearing word "grotto" puts me in an optimistic frame of mind.

Finally, no theme park worth my admisn money would be complete without a lection of adult beverages, and CoCo y steps to the plate with the Wet Roost-Bar, next to the entrance to the 321-t lazy river. This place may look like a cDonald's playland, but the Wet Rooster
't messing around when it comes to stiff inks. Check out the description for the ccaneer's Brew: "Get ready to walk the rry juice." Would a Long Island Iced Tea any other name taste as sweet? You'll ve to try one of those and let me know.

ANOBIE LAKE PARK

ly about 30 miles from Boston, Canobie ke Park is one of those places I've driven st a million times but never actually vis-
d. Well, today's the day, which is too d, because I've made an uncharacteristi-lly rookie amusement-park mistake: This he last day of school for half the kids
New Hampshire. The parking lot is mmed with buses, and all the cool rides ve wicked long lines. Aw, man…
This is too bad, because front and cenis the Xtreme Frisbee ride, which is w this year and exerts forces of up to r Gs on riders. You just know that any-ing with the word "Xtreme" in its name s to be rad, but the line to climb aboard e giant spinning disk is too long to conmplate. Instead, I watch for a moment, tening to the screams of the riders and ndering why the Frisbee's structure is rned with a giant print of the Mona
a. I guess if you think about it, DaVinci s pretty Xtreme.

In lieu of rides, then, I opt for a more ditional approach: playing games in pes of winning a shoddily constructed sh toy for my woman. Canobie Lake rk has all my favorite county-fair games, d I laser-plink varmints at the shooting ge, throw my arm out trying to guess speed at the baseball toss and then p a quarter in the slot machine at the kpot Casino.

Yes, you heard me right: Canobie Lake rk has a casino. Only here, the slot chines dispense Skee-Ball tickets that u can use to redeem prizes. Of course, n a toy car that looks like it would cost ut $2 at Wal-Mart goes for about 1,000
kets, and my 25-cent pull on a slot chine nets me six tickets. So really, this retty solid training to prepare kids for l slot machines: You put your money in, d in return you get nothing!

Just outside the casino, on the shore of Canobie's namesake body of water, is a e that actually doesn't have a huge line.
It's one of those deals where you climb into a seat suspended by chains and get whirled around in the air like you're the wire on a giant Weed Wacker spool, and it's called "DaVinci's Dream." Again with the DaVinci stuff. Somebody call Tom Hanks, because I think I'm missing the connection between Leo DaVinci and New Hampshire amusement parks. The ride is entertaining enough, however, and it gives you a great view of the lake, which leads me to my Canobie Lake Park epiphany.

Namely, there's fun to be had here, but this place isn't necessarily all about the rides (though the Yankee Cannonball coaster and the Boston Tea Party log flume look pretty awesome). For instance, Canobie's Portofino restaurant has a patio on the water, and the open-air Lake Arcade is about 100 feet away. I envision a more perfect Canobie Lake visit involving beers on the patio followed by lakeside air hockey. Because with age comes the wisdom that life's too short to wait in lines.

Canobie Lake Park, Salem, N.H.
603-893-3506, www.canobie.com
Pros: Easy drive from Boston, lots of county fair–style games, scenic lakeside location, fireworks every Saturday night
Cons: Lines can get long and there's no way around them, go-karts are on rails, majority of the rides seem aimed at little kids
Busch Gardens Rating: .31

SIX FLAGS NEW ENGLAND

Six Flags is a bit of a haul (roughly 90 miles from Boston), but if you're serious about your amusement parks, it's worth a pilgrimage. Sporting rides with names like Mind Eraser, Scream, Tomahawk, Pandemonium, Buzzsaw and Superman: Ride of Steel, Six Flags pegs the expectations bar pretty high.

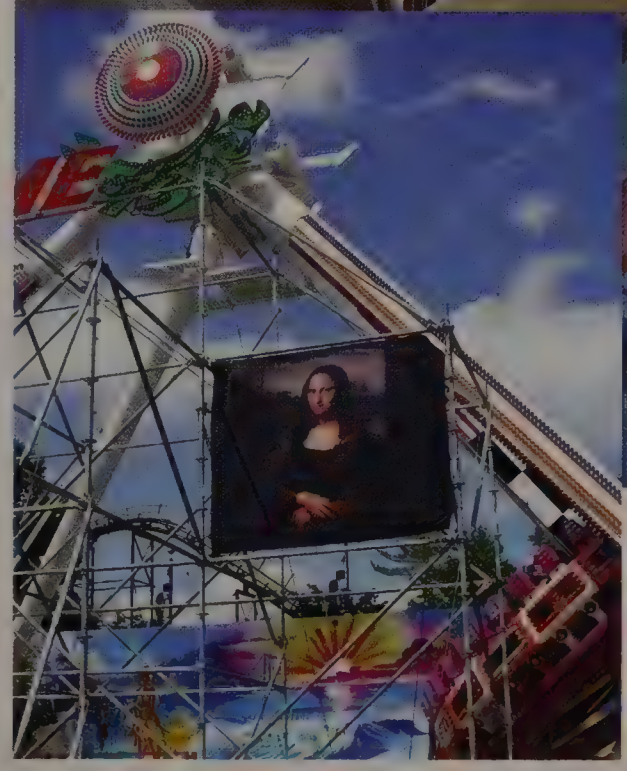
Before I get started, one word of advice here: If you go to Six Flags, you absolutely must invest in a Flash Pass. The Flash Pass is like one of those vibrating buzzers that you get at a restaurant while you wait for a seat, except in this case it tells you when you can show up at a ride and hop right on without waiting in line. A Flash Pass Gold is $52 on top of your ticket price, but it's worth every cent not to have to stand in line. And believe me, the lines at Six Flags get pretty epic, judging by one sign that said "Approximate wait from this point: 90 minutes."

I decide to kick things off with the hairiest roller coaster Six Flags has to offer, Superman: Ride of Steel. Superman hits 77 miles per hour during its initial drop, which points the coaster straight down into a free fall. This segment of the ride may be my personal scariest amusement-park moment, ever. I highly recommend it.

Legs wobbling from Superman, I switch up comic-book heroes and head for Batman: The Dark Knight. Batman is one of those coasters where the floor drops out beneath you and your legs dangle freely over dangerous-looking machinery. That's certainly interesting, but the ride itself isn't that scary. One of the 40-ish moms strapped in to my left informs me that she likes Batman because it's smooth, unlike the nearby Mind Eraser, which "just slams your head around."

My tour continues with Cyclone, a wooden roller coaster that achieves its considerable terror not through superlative speed and inverted loops, but from imparting the distinct sensation that it's going to fall apart at any moment. The fact that one of the two sets of cars is circulating the tracks empty reinforces the idea that Cyclone is decrepit enough to deserve its own bona-fide carny at the turnstile instead of a clean-cut Six Flags worker.

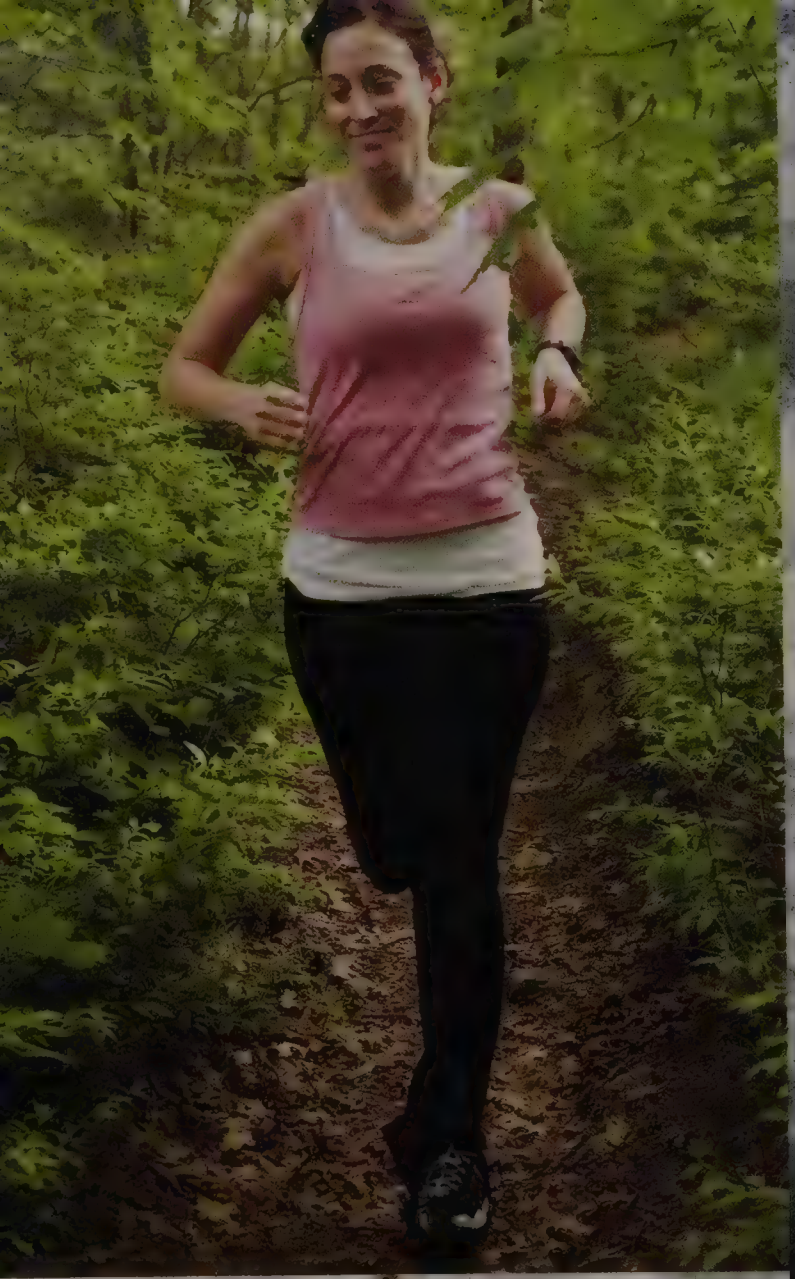
After the Twister (described by the park map as a "thrilling inverted ride"), Scream (one of those giant towers that rockets you skyward and then lets your seat drop out from under you for a free-fall) and the Flashback (a roller coaster that sends you around both forwards and backwards), I'm thinking about hitting Superman again before beating traffic out of there. But on my way to the Ride of Steel, I pass Nightwing, and my plans change.



I'd heard some kids talking about Nightwing earlier. They said they didn't like it and it made them want to throw up. Well, that sounds like a challenge to me, so I beep my Flash Pass at the gate and climb aboard.

If you're overweight, afraid of heights or claustrophobic, Nightwing would be your worst nightmare. You lie on your stomach locked into what looks like a padded, horizontal Iron Maiden that's so snug that deep breaths aren't really possible. Then you're spun around in the air, diving down toward the crowd of onlookers and then soaring back up into the sky. Nightwing lets you experience what it would be like if you just acquired the power of flight but weren't very good at it. I consider myself Superman, Stomach of Steel, but Nightwing gives me that reading-in-the-car feeling halfway back to Boston.

It may be a bit of a haul, but if you're a serious g-force junkie, Six Flags offers the most Busch Gardens–esque thrills this side of the Florida state line.



Six Flags New England, Springfield

Pros: Unbeatable rides, lots of variety, multiple beer vendors on premises
Cons: I heard Coldplay but not Crazy Train, parking is $15, lines could be scarier than the rides if you don't get a Flash Pass

Do the Wild Thing

Forget that treadmill. Head to the hills and rivers for your cardio workout.

IT TURNS OUT BOSTON ISN'T THE CENTER of the universe. ■ OK, I knew that. Bu you're like me, you're umbilical-corded to electronic devices all day and the farthest your buffalo roam is that patch of backyard defined by your neighbor's chain-link fence. The city and 'burbs begin to feel like the onl world—one of cookouts, car alarms and dog doodie as far as the foot ca step. ■ Summer's the time to remind yourself that the great outdoors is so far out there. In New England, encounters with real nature, both savag and domesticated, aren't hard to come by. What follow are five adventu ous activities and ideal sites to try them out—pockets of green, clumps rock, lofty peaks, wild waters and blustery beaches—all within a reason- able drive of our fair city. ■ So, my fellow citizens, forget your cell phone strap on your hiking boots and slap on the sunscreen. Pirate Boulder. Dungeon Rock. Swamp sland. Wolf Pits. These sound like stops on a Disneyland ride to me. But after an afternoon of wandering Lynn Woods Reservation, I learn they're names of real-life features of this 2,200-acre jewel alongside the sprawl of Route 1. Lynn Woods has hemlock forests, boggy glens, a few hills measuring nearly 300 feet tall, four ponds Lynn's drinking water supply, so no swimming)—and some 40 miles of trails ideal for ogging and mountain biking.

"I run here almost every day," says Michelle Permatteo, 30. "The steep stuff kills me." Permatteo isn't alone. "Lynn cops and remen get in shape, schools run here," ays Dan Small, Lynn Water and Sewer Commission ranger. "Wednesday night here are organized races."

As for mountain biking, Lynn Woods is the grand-pappy of the local places," ccording to Kip Schultz, a 15-year veteran biker from Cambridge. The south side's ide fire roads are best for fast cruising. or more technical trails—"little snaking ings that crisscross all over the place"—chultz, 44, suggests checking out the orth side (accessible from the Great oods Road entrance or the Naked Fish staurant parking lot off Route 1).

"It's like Moab-style slickrock, crazy tegration of the trail and rock," he says. This is definitely varsity. Some of the chnicals will definitely raise the hair on e back of your neck."

In other metro-area green spaces, mel-w walkers have clashed with barreling kers. But at Lynn, Small says, despite a w "knuckleheads," the myriad users co-ist. He even sees Lynn Woods as under-ilized. "We need to get a few more peo-e to use the place."

I wish I'd brought my bike. And my rate hat.

's very challenging, it's very exciting, it's ry engaging," says Kevin McMillan, ector of rafting programs for Zoar tdoor. McMillan is gushing about the erfield River—in particular, rafting or yaking the class III and IV section led the Dryway, where staying dry is gh impossible.

Just off the Mohawk Trail (aka Route 2) western Massachusetts, the Dryway and e Deerfield's other big rapids, the class II and III stretch called Zoar Gap, hold their own when compared with rivers in North Carolina and Maine, whitewater's traditional hotbeds.

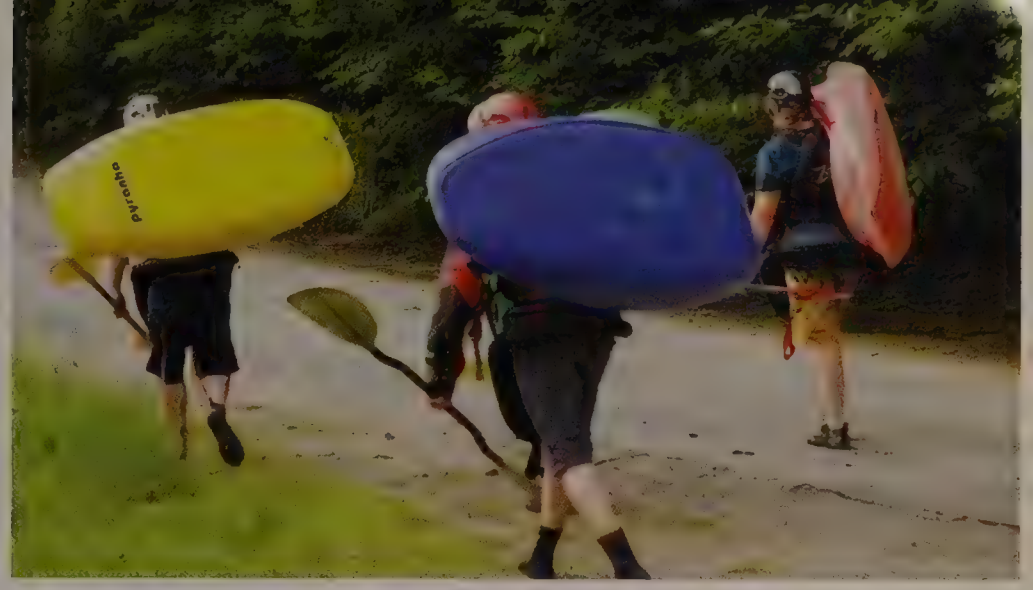
I've rafted the Deerfield before, and I remember the thrill of first-time jitters. "These are guided trips," says McMillan, whose company takes out 12,000 people a summer. "You don't need experience."

Multiperson rafting is the easiest intro to the river. Zoar also offers one-day private kayak lessons and two-, three- and five-day kayak clinics. You don't have to be young and buff to try it. "Kayaking is a sport of finesse," he tells me, mentioning a 60-year-old who recently learned the sport. "The river does all the work."

The Deerfield's water levels are predictably controlled, so beginners can navigate the river's labyrinth of rocks, waves and holes without fear. "We can have fun without the anxiety [of other rivers]," McMillan says. And because the Deerfield "runs through the middle of nowhere in Massachusetts" (thanks to undeveloped lands owned mostly by the state and power company), the paddling backdrop feels wild.

Plus, the 10:30 am shove-off time is quite civilized, and the guaranteed thrills are over by 4:30 pm. Which means Bostonians like me who want to get their feet wet can be dried off and back home before dark. Just call ahead: Trips fill up two to six weeks in advance.

Summiting a mountain: Mount Lafayette, Franconia Notch State Park, N.H.
Drive from Boston: 2½ hours



Appalachian Mountain Club,

Reservations for AMC huts, 603-466-2727
Trail information and weather, 603-466-2721

I've always wanted to climb Mount Washington. Never happened. But this summer I've got a new goal: A different peak, less crowded, but just as challenging. "This time of year one of my favorite places throughout the Whites is the alpine zone," says Mike Kautz, huts manager for the Appalachian Mountain Club.

In particular, Kautz tells me a strenuous and memorable hike comparable to Washington would be taking the Falling Waters Trail across the Franconia Ridge Trail, crossing the peak of Little Haystack and Mount Lincoln, and ending up on the summit of Mount Lafayette. At 5,260 feet, it's the highest peak in the Franconia Ridge and offers jaw-dropping views east into the Pemigewasset Wilderness Area, northeast toward the Presidentials, and west into Vermont's Mount Mansfield and the Camel's Hump. The route, mostly above the tree line, is about 10 miles round-trip, and it can be done in one eight-hour day. But some hikers spend the night at the Greenleaf AMC hut to break up the hike into two days. Overnight guests get a five-course meal. Hikers just passing by can fill up their water bottles at Greenleaf, Kautz suggests, buy a candy bar or T-shirt, or have soup for lunch. The way down is via the Old Bridle Path.

One thing to be wary of is severe weather. Even in summer, the potential for snow, sleet and 70-mile-per-hour winds necessitates that hikers wear layers, including a Gortex jacket and pants. "It can get socked in," Kautz warns, comparing sudden white-out conditions to "walking through… a bowl of milk."

When I go, I'll bring a good map. And cookies—better yet, a granola bar—for my milk.

Kiteboarding: Cape Cod
Drive from Boston: 3 hours

Little Overhead, 508-240-1455, www.little overhead.com, $300 for a three-hour lesson

What makes the Cape one of the best places in the world to kiteboard? "We almost always have wind," says Sebastian Frawley, 37, owner of Little Overhead, a surf and kiteboard shop and school in Eastham. "It's a peninsula, so you can always find the right direction of wind." If the wind's not blowing just so at the oceanside beaches from Orleans to Truro, Frawley moves to the bayside towns of Eastham and Wellfleet.

Also known as kite surfers, kiteboarders, with their feet strapped to a small surfboard, use a kite to propel themselves through the water. The kite will "pick you right up off the ground, usually 20 to 40 feet in the air," Frawley says. Controlled flying, or "catching air," is naturally the big appeal, but it's also what makes it risky. That's why beginners usually need two days of instruction to feel fully comfortable.

To teach the sport, Frawley has students master the equipment and learn to control the kite safely on land first. He teaches techniques for launching, getting air, landing, body dragging and self-rescue. "It seems it would all be about upper body strength, but it's all about control and balance," Frawley tells me. "All your pull is in the harness." But he doesn't like to pussyfoot around. "We like to get them wet the first day," he says.

Fortunately, this relatively new sport has gotten easier to learn in the past couple of years. "The equipment has gotten 20,000 times better, more user-friendly and safer," he says. And cheaper: Packages cost around $1,200. Or less if you learn to fly from Little Overhead.

Overnight hiking and camping: Tully Trail and Tully Lake Campground, Boylston
Drive from Boston: 1½ hours

Trustees of Reservations, www.the trustees.org
Tully Lake Campground, 978-249-4957 (seasonal), 978-248-9455 (year-round), www.tullylakecampground.org

The day is muggy, the Tully Lake and River high, the hemlock woods damp. Thirty minutes into my hike, I realize I forgot my bug repellent. The mosquitoes are merciless. Silly, silly human.

I pick up the pace, almost run. And still enjoy my speed tour of the Tully Trail, a 22-mile, yellow-blazed route that's part logging road, part skinny trail skirting wetlands and part climbing, mossy falls to rocky overlooks. The only people I see all day are three men in a canoe. Bliss. Except for the bugs.

"This loop has been able to link together state forest and federal lands and conservation easements," says Walker Korby, superintendent of the Quabbin Management Unit for the Trustees of Reservations, which spearheaded the effort. The nonprofit Trustees, which owns 96 reservations and has helped preserve some 53,000 acres statewide, also runs the Tully Lake Campground at the trail's south end. Here, canoes and kayaks are available for rent. Korby recommends that hikers spend the first night at the campground, get an early start the next day and hike (with their gear) to the shelter at the loop's midpoint, then hike back to the campground the next day. Parts of the trail are also open to mountain bikes.

The 45-foot Royalston Falls, near the shelter, is "a pretty impressive area," he says. Along the trail, "You'll find moose tracks, if you know what to look for."

Which I don't. But I check out the shelter, set amid the hemlocks and birches, and agree it's impressive. I vow to come back and stay there—that is, me and a big can of bug dope. iB

JACQUELINE SHEEHAN

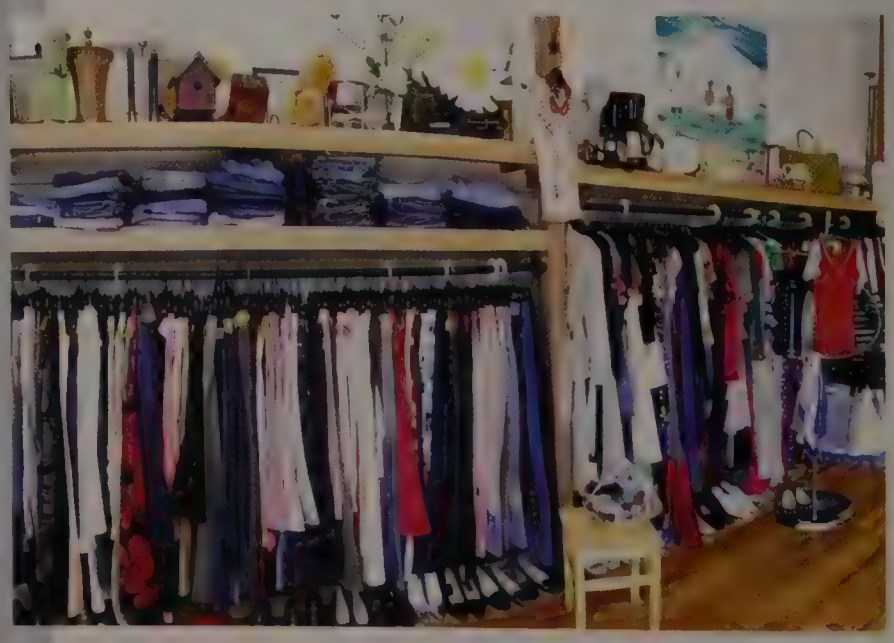
NO DOG IS AN ISLAND

Massachusetts resident Jacqueline Sheehan explores grief in her new novel Lost & Found.

Lost & Found works as a novel about loss—the heroine's husband has died suddenly—as a mystery and as an ode to a dog. Rocky, a psychologist, goes to Peak's Island off the coast of Maine to escape her widowed sadness by working as an animal warden. There she meets and takes on Lloyd, a foundling pooch bafflingly injured by an arrow. People assemble around this whodunit: a minister, a woman with the gift of synesthesia, whereby sensations come in colors; an obsessively anorexic teenager, Melissa; and an intense and fascinating man, Hill, who teaches Rocky archery, a skill that burns her jagged attention towards an almost mystically sharp point. Lloyd's original owner, a bipolar woman named Liz, has died of an overdose. Rocky's attachment to Lloyd brings her into contact with lingering questions about Liz's life and death, difficult mother and disturbing island-haunting boyfriend, Peter, who comes to trouble and frighten Rocky while she's building her healing connection with the also-wounded dog. Sheehan elaborates the many pathways Rocky's grief takes her into something richer, with her pet playing hero.

OPEN DIALOGUE

The Public Conversations Project (46 Kondazian St., Watertown; 617-923-1216; www.publicconversations.org) work to improve mutual understanding.



Hostility inhabits adversarial exchanges—between family members, coworkers, businesses, natio Blaming, defending, sarcastically raking the air, using fingers as quotation marks to mockingly char terize an antagonist's position—it's poison. Blessedly, the Public Conversations Project has a differ approach. Started in 1989 by therapists from the Family Institute of Cambridge, they offer services t foster dialogue. With no goal of changing an opponent's position, thereby eliminating the toxic "I w you lose" agenda, they bring people together on opposite sides of an issue—for example, the Hutus a Tutsis in Burundi, Africa, during workshops in March—in a spirit and format that invites consider listening. Defensive armor clatters to the ground as the inquiring listener follows threads, invites cl fications, and hears more notes and textures in the score. Not needing to be an attack dog, the qu tioner has the luxury of taking on a more objective, dispassionate role. FOOD WITH A SIDE OF WINE

Vino, schmino. Bin 26's culinary craftsmanship takes center stage.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

Bin 26 Enoteca co-owner Babak Bina almost radiates enthusiasm for the fruit of the vine. The word enoteca, Italian for "wine library," comes from Oeno, the Greek goddess of wine, and it has come to signify an eatery where the food plays a supporting role to the wine. Indeed, floor-to-ceiling wine storage racks comprise a major part of this small bistro's décor and fill a good part of its Charles Street space. At the same time, Babak and co-owner Azita Bina-Seibel (his sister) haven't slighted the food. While a serious oenophile could have a field day romping through Bin 26's encyclopedic catalog of wine offerings, complete with maps and explanatory text, it'd be a mistake to think the cuisine served in this engaging eatery a mere afterthought. The magic performed in Azita's kitchen would draw enthusiastic patrons even if the 18th Amendment were back in full force. Her care and creativity in the kitchen make this a premier dining destination in Beacon Hill, on Charles Street right around the corner from the Bina siblings' long-running Persian restaurant, Lala Rokh.

Anchovies

Dinner began with a basket of excellent chewy-crusted French loaves supplied by Iggy's, Boston's venerable bread purveyor, accompanied by deliciously fruity, aromatic extra virgin olive oil. One appetizer, the fresh tomato soup ($9), fully deserved the enthusiastic reports it had received, its intense, fresh, ripe tomato flavor—many weeks before the arrival of natives—nicely balanced between sweet and tart. Its chunky texture and simple, streamlined preparation with nothing added beyond basil, olive oil, salt and pepper made it a most satisfying prelude. A more complex appetizer, fresh mozzarella ($12) wrapped and seared in speck, a pleasantly salty ham from the Dolomites in northern Italy, came with a garnish of perfectly grilled vegetables—zucchini, red pepper and eggplant. Roasting gave the mozzarella an interesting, coarse texture and slightly smoky flavor.

An infrequently encountered appetizer this side of the Atlantic, chicken liver pâté ($8), brought three generous slices of rich, smooth, sweet-savory pâté with a garnish of caramelized onions, cornichons (miniature gherkins), little toasts and a fresh basil leaf. This classic first course would make a terrific late-night snack, accompanied by a glass of full-bodied red wine. Finally, a special appetizer one evening, white anchovies ($6), arrived as a phalanx of nine or 10 slender anchovies lined up, crisscrossed with thin slices of red pequillo peppers and moistened with a piquant vinaigrette that complemented their slightly mild, briny flavor.

In the Italian fashion, Bin 26 offered pasta courses in appropriate portions between the antipasti and the main courses. Cocoa tagliatelle ($16) came dressed in a rich sauce of porcini mushrooms seasoned with napitelo, a minty variety of oregano. The cocoa seemed more for color than flavor, but the woodsy flavor and distinctive texture of the mushrooms went particularly well with the fresh strands of pasta, which were cooked perfectly. On a subsequent visit, I chose the pasta with sweet Italian sausage ($18), but I asked if they could replace the fusilli listed on the menu with some variety of long noodles. The result was fresh linguini, resilient yet tender, a splendid vehicle for the meaty sauce of flavorful, expertly seasoned ground pork sausage laced with razor-thin, hauntingly aromatic truffles crunchy walnuts, enriched with a l heavy cream. Formidabile!

After the first-rate appetizers and pa I was prepared to be let down by the n courses. If the food were merely intende a sideshow to the wine, the apps and p could play that role, allowing the kitc to slack off on the rest. Instead, it tu out excellent preparations ranging f poultry to beef, pork and seafood that pelled that notion. As one moves away from the toward the back of the dining room, the e seems crowded and closed-in, partly use the large wine storage racks take up uch room.

Finally, a word about those wines. A bottle of Colosi Sicilia Rosso, 2004 ($24), the least expensive red wine on the menu, was a straightforward, fruity wine with sufficient acidity to go well with the food. A half-liter carafe of the lowest-priced sangiovese on the menu ($20) was less successful, with a flavor I found tired and lacking in freshness. By and large, the wine prices seemed high, out of sync with the very reasonable food prices. I found it impossible to gauge how aggressively Bin 26 marks up wine from its wholesale cost, because most of the brands offered were unfamiliar to me. As is the case with many restaurants, it may be that the better values in Bin 26's wines can be found in the more expensive selections, and perhaps in some of the private-label wines bottled exclusively for the restaurant. Unfortunately I didn't have an opportunity to sample the latter, but that's an omission I'll doubtless remedy. Bin 26's culinary craftsmanship clearly merits multiple return visits. IB

Christiania Vodka presents FOOD PAIRING OF THE MONTH

HUDSON VALLEY FOIE GRAS with THE CHRISTI FRESH

CHEF: Eric Brennan
MIXOLOGIST: Jillian Zona RESTAURANT: EXCELSIOR
272 Boylston Street, Boston, MA

"The prosecco in the Christi Fresh gives it a pear like flavor that co-exists well with the foie gras. The cocktail's slight sweetness helps penetrate the richness of the dish." —Eric Brennan

We believe very deeply that chefs should have the power to impact the complete dining experience. And that a perfectly crafted cocktail is the ultimate compliment to the best culinary dishes in Boston.

To this end, we propose Christiania Vodka as the perfect platform for these pairings. Christiania is six times distilled from organic Norwegian potatoes and pure Norwegian spring water. It's then charcoal filtered and aerated to eliminate all impurities. The result is The World's Smoothest Vodka™.

Every month, we choose a winning food pairing to be featured in this ad. Please send your submission to BostonPairings@christianiavodka.com. The deadline is the 15th of each month. The winner will be given a prize and have his/her pairing featured in this ad.

Switcheroo in Savin Hill

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Janice Silva—the chef who reopened historic Amrheins in South Boston over a year ago and is now overhauling CF Donovan's in Savin Hill as well as readying a new Donovan's in Hyde Park—is unabashed about her lack of formal culinary training.

"I hear voices at night, and the next day I make the stuff," she says.

What kind of stuff? For starters, grilled, pan-seared shrimp cakes with ginger-lime aioli, because "I am so tired of crabcakes," she says. "Crabcakes are over, baby!"

Also over, says Silva, is the stress of her Amrheins gig, which led her to open up a walk-in massage studio in Weymouth after her January departure. Now, she says, "when my staff gets stressed out, I send 'em to Weymouth for a massage. Or I'll bring the massage therapists into the restaurant for a massage in the kitchen.... We've got it going on down here."

"Here" is the former Mario's in Hyde Park, which will feature a 250-seat dining room, a floor for catering and a bar that Silva promises will become "the place to be" when it opens at summer's end.

At both venues, entrées such as pan-seared haddock with basil mashed potatoes and fresh peas will be priced under $20. Silva, who opened Ciro's at Marina Bay more than 10 years ago, describes her style as "sexy classic comfort food. [The owners] want to call it traditional New England cuisine, but I'll be doing my own thing," she laughs.

Meanwhile, the new executive chef at Amrheins is Richard Ansara, fresh from a three-year stint as chef at... CF Donovan's.

"It's like a baseball team trading players," he says. Of course, this "trade" was coincidental, and much less money was at stake. Ansara has revamped Amrheins' menu to include dishes such as parmesan-crusted haddock and his signature sugar-cured ribeye steak, caramelized on the grill, but he doesn't plan to get "too funky."

"The lobster pie is just flying out of here," he reports. "It's $19, and I'm using all tail meat, too!"

Field of Dreams

So you'll never make the big leagues or hear your last name called from the dugout. Who says you can't play at Fenway? Not Life Is Good, that's for sure. The company's annual summer festival, cosponsored by THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN, is headed to the ballpark this year, and all the rookies in town are invited. Meet Red Sox legends, join in the world's largest game of catch in the stands, have your pitches clocked and hear music from live bands including the Gin Blossoms. Proceeds from this World's Greatest Backyard Athlete event benefit Project Joy and the Red Sox Foundation. Did we mention there's a Yankees' dunk tank? Fenway Park, 4 Yawkey Way, Boston. www.lifeisgood.com. 11 am-6 pm. $20, adults; $10, kids. —AK

FRI.–SUN./JUNE 29–JULY 1

Performing Arts: Totally Delirious

If you've seen Knocked Up, you may have a heightened interest in attending Cirque du Soleil... or taking a hallucinogenic drug. We're not convinced there's much of a difference, except that the stunts in the troupe's latest production, Delirium, are real—not just a figment of your whacked-out imagination. Set to a tribal beat, the mesmerizing performance features acrobatics (think bodies contorting themselves in ways that seem physically impossible) and enormous projections. The show, which will include live music for the first time in the troupe's history, is all about finding truth in a world increasingly out of touch with reality. We told you it was trippy. TD Banknorth Garden, 100 Legends Way, Boston (617-624-1000). www.ticketmaster.com. June 29, 8 pm; June 30, 3 and 8 pm; July 1, 8 pm. $37–$122.50. —AK

Mike O'Malley, Tim Wakefield and Jason Varitek

THU./JUNE 28

CityScope: A Laughing Matter

While Jason Varitek doesn't get much of a chance to team up with Tim Wakefield on the field—that unenviable task usually falls to Doug Mirabelli—Tek and Wake are making quite the combo off the diamond. On June 28, the pair will once again take the stage at the Comedy Connection as hosts of the Pitching in for Kids benefit, cosponsored by THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN. The annual laughs show will also feature Yes, Dear's Mike O'Malley; performances by local comics; fare from Kingfish Hall, Zuma's Tex Mex, Maggianos and others; and auction items including trips to L.A. to see American Idol and Paris to see the Police perform. All proceeds benefit Pitching in for Kids, a nonprofit organization that provides grants to help improve children's lives across New England. Comedy Connection, Quincy Market Building, Faneuil Hall, Boston (617-367-3322). www.pitchinginforkids.org. 7 pm. $150. —RL

Movies: Students on a Role

Put young men with video cameras on a bus touring the co try, and you've got a recipe for remorseful daughters and m fied fathers. But brothers Brian and Steven Amos want to show their generation's wit, not its wild side. Use "student an adjective, and you've stigmatized a movie as something be arduously tolerated, like a child's piano recital. "People student film, and they think weird and experimental, empt rooms and strange lighting," Steven Amos says. "But there some really good films being done with really low budgets. The Wisconsinites started Student Films Across America give high school and college filmmakers a venue beyond th abyss of YouTube. After receiving 580 entries from 15 cou tries, they narrowed the field to three winners. See these th movies, plus two of Boston's best, at the Coolidge Corner Theatre, where the only people going wild will be the aud ence. Coolidge Corner Theatre, 290 Harvard St., Brookline (734-2500). www.coolidge.org. 7 pm. $10. —Nick Altschulle

There's a Rat in My Soup!

Forget fancy food. With Ratatouille, Pixar serves audiences tepid slop.

BY SEAN BURNS

A rat spices things up in a Parisian kitchen in Brad Bird's latest film.

In 1995, John Lasseter and the folks at Pixar Animation Studios blew our minds and stole our hearts with the remarkable, unprecedented Toy Story. All this time later it's tough to remember the initial, eye-popping shock of Andy's bustling, computer-generated playroom: those polished plastic surfaces and almost tactile, three-dimensional renderings. Cowboy Woody and Buzz Lightyear looked like nothing we'd ever seen before, and their adventures became an industry-changing event, eventually ushering out old-fashioned ink-and-paint cartoons the way sound features finished off the silent era.

For 10 solid years, Pixar ruled the family entertainment roost. In a time when sequels to children's films were cheap direct-to-video knock-offs, Toy Story 2 boldly hit the big screen and turned out to be better than the original. Meanwhile, even the crankiest critic would be hard-pressed to find many unkind words for A Bug's Life, Monsters Inc., Finding Nemo and The Incredibles. Competitors scrambled to follow suit, flooding the market with their own computer-animated kid flicks. Even Disney eventually gave up on hand-drawn animation altogether, while DreamWorks made billions of dollars with those ghastly Shrek pictures.

But if you take another look at that list of hits from Pixar's decade-long winning streak, chances are the fact that they're animated is one of the last things that springs to mind. These aren't good "animated movies," and they aren't good "children's movies"—they're just good movies, period. Whether we're following space rangers, superheroes or fish, they're all fully fleshed-out characters with whom audiences can happily identify. And there's no condescending to the toddlers in the crowd, nor any cheeky in-jokes for the parents. Lasseter's crack story department specialized in straight-up, classical Hollywood storytelling for everyone to enjoy together.

All good things must come to an end, and so last year's woefully disappointing Cars brought a close to Pixar's reign. This uncharacteristically pokey, preachy rip-off of the forgotten Michael J. Fox vehicle Doc Hollywood had none of the wit and invention we'd come to take for granted from these artists. Riddled with merchandise tie-ins and lazy pop-culture references better suited to a certain green ogre's adventures, Cars was the first Pixar movie that could be dismissed as just another kiddie flick.

I'm afraid the same can be said for Ratatouille.

It takes a certain amount of nerve to fashion a fantasy about a rodent in a kitchen, and so screenwriter/director Brad Bird must be commended for his chutzpah in telling this tale of Remy (voiced by the great stand-up comic Patton Oswalt), a rat with misguided dreams of someday becoming a gourmet chef. An acolyte of world-famous celebrity cook Gusteau (Brad Garrett), Remy scavenges his way through garbage in the French countryside, attempting to put together pleasing flavor combinations, much to the confusion and consternation of his friends and family.

When disaster strikes, our hero must venture out on his own, eventually fumbling his way into a top-rated Parisian restaurant, causing all sorts of panic in the kitchen before finally wowing the regular customers with an offbeat soup recipe of his own invention. The film's central gimmick, which takes too long to set up and doesn't make much sense, has Remy hidden beneath the chef's hat of loose-limbed garbage boy Linguini (Lou Romano), where he can control the lad's movements by tugging away at random strands of hair.

With Remy thus working him like a marionette, Linguini quickly becomes a culinary superstar, inciting the wrath of dastardly head chef Skinner (Ian Holm), the affection of fellow cook Colette (Janeane Garofalo) and the unwanted interest of a vicious, reputation-destroying food critic, tellingly named Anton Ego (Peter O'Toole). Exactly how long can our heroes keep up this wacky charade? As the film clocks in at 110 minutes, I'd say they bring it off for a good bit longer than necessary.

Ratatouille is a well-meaning movie, repeating the admirable sentiment that talent can come from anywhere and that we shouldn't be so quick to judge folks based on their appearances or unsavory backgrounds… even if they do happen to be rodents. It's also got the usual Pixar razzle-dazzle, with unbelievable attention paid to every last bristle in Remy's fur, and several widescreen Paris skylines more beautiful than actual photographs.

And yet, the material feels strangely one-dimensional, geared more towards the kids' table than a universal audience. Bird previously helmed Pixar's fantastic superhero send-up The Incredibles, where he struck a fine balance between cartoon derring-do and more sophisticated considerations of family and aging. By comparison, the far simpler Ratatouille comes off as child's play.

There is, however, a lovely monologue by O'Toole's rascally restaurant reviewer, during which he explains that the duty of a critic is not just to tear down what is already established, but to aid and assist his readers in the discovery of something exciting and new. His words brought me back to the electric jolt I got when watching the original Toy Story, a spark of invention the talented artists at Pixar will hopefully rediscover soon. IB ance that's astonishing in its subtlety and control.

's a good fit for the movie, as director Michael Vinterbottom deliberately avoids putting any sort awful outcome and proves that in such cases per-ps the best, most respectful thing a filmmaker can

Mr. Brooks ★★½

Words cannot convey the sheer lunacy of this bona de guilty pleasure, which stars Kevin Costner as a ealthy philanthropist who moonlights as a serial ller, thanks to the urgings of his homicidal imagi-ary friend, played with great relish by William urt. Caught in the act by a peeping tom photogra-her (odious comedian Dane Cook), Costner's eedy Lecter-lite is blackmailed into giving slasherssons and soon finds himself drawing the suspious gaze of Demi Moore's snarling, millionaire per-cop. As if all this weren't gleefully preposter-us enough, our hero's young daughter seems to be hibiting symptoms of "the family curse," and ere's also some stiff competition from another ragg madman who just busted out of prison. Moore's sastrous turn is one for the camp history books, yet angely emblematic of the nutzoid joy Mr. Brooks spires as it careens so wildly out of control. Hurt d Costner make a marvelous team, the latter reling an opportunity to trash his nice-guy image. I ess by some objective measure the film is probably quite awful, but there's never a dull moment. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Namesake ★★

Movies aren't novels, an inconvenient truth that apparently escaped the gifted Mira Nair, who directed this well-intentioned, borderline interminable adaptation of Jhumpa Lahiri's bestseller. Forced to winnow down a dense, unwieldy 30 years' worth of trials and tribulations faced by a family of Bengali immigrants, Nair opts for the greatest-hits approach—summarizing several lifetimes in rapid-fire shorthand. Kal Penn, of Harold and Kumar Go to White Castle fame, stars as the stubborn, ungrateful son, rediscovering his cultural heritage only during his darkest moments of adversity. Drifting almost aimlessly through the decades, Nair's stumblebum reworking not only transplants Lahiri's story from Boston to Manhattan, but also feels more like a rushed collection of half-realized scenes, with her typical keenly observed behavioral details clanging against all sorts of hasty exposition and time-lapse dissolves. Books can afford to linger, ramble and digress, but the best films by and large tend to exist on short clocks with clear objectives, concepts anathema to The Namesake's pig-pile of haphazard incident and epic sprawl. (At Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Ocean's Thirteen ★★½

Such an easygoing, empty little piffle you'll probably already have forgotten it before you even exit the parking lot, director Steven Soderbergh's second sequel to his jaunty 2001 Rat Pack remake is the kind of movie you go see because the theater has air conditioning. Ditching the in-jokey, self-satisfied smugness that made 2004's Ocean's Twelve such a chore to sit through, this leaner, more business-like third installment sends George Clooney and Brad Pitt on a personal vendetta against Al Pacino's spray-tanned, Henna-haired casino boss. An absurd scenario to bankrupt the house is played out by the gargantuan supporting cast with Howard Hawks-ian professionalism and an emphasis on cool. Soderbergh jazzes up the proceedings with a dazzling array of smash-cuts, time-shifts, split-screens and vibrant splashes of color, using his astonishing command of cinematic grammar to successfully distract us from the fact that there's really not much going on here at all. Clooney and Pitt cruise along in a sort of ludicrously handsome second gear, with Matt Damon again doing most of the heavy lifting as their misfit protégé. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Once ★★★

This wildly over-praised, rough-around-the-edges Irish musical boasts some stray moments of genuine transcendence within a wobbly framework. Glen Hansard stars as a scruffy vacuum-cleaner repairman, busking away on ratty Dublin street-corners with a beat-up guitar and an ache in his soul. Marketa Irglova plays the flat-broke, piano-playing cleaning lady who takes his songs to heart, and somehow these two fumble their way around a mutual attraction while making some beautiful music together. Written and directed by John Carney, Once indeed boasts a unique and transporting power, but only while these two are singing. Wellsprings of repressed emotion burst through the lyrics, and the simple act of recording a demo tape somehow feels like a joyous communion of souls. Alas, whenever the music stops, not a heck of a lot rings true. Irglova's more of an underdeveloped male fantasy projection than an actual character, and the romanticized conclusion feels like a failure of common sense by all involved. Carney's low-fi, shaky-camcorder visuals too often mistake "ugly" for "gritty," but oh what sweet, sweet songs. (At Harvard Square, Coolidge Corner and Waltham Embassy.)

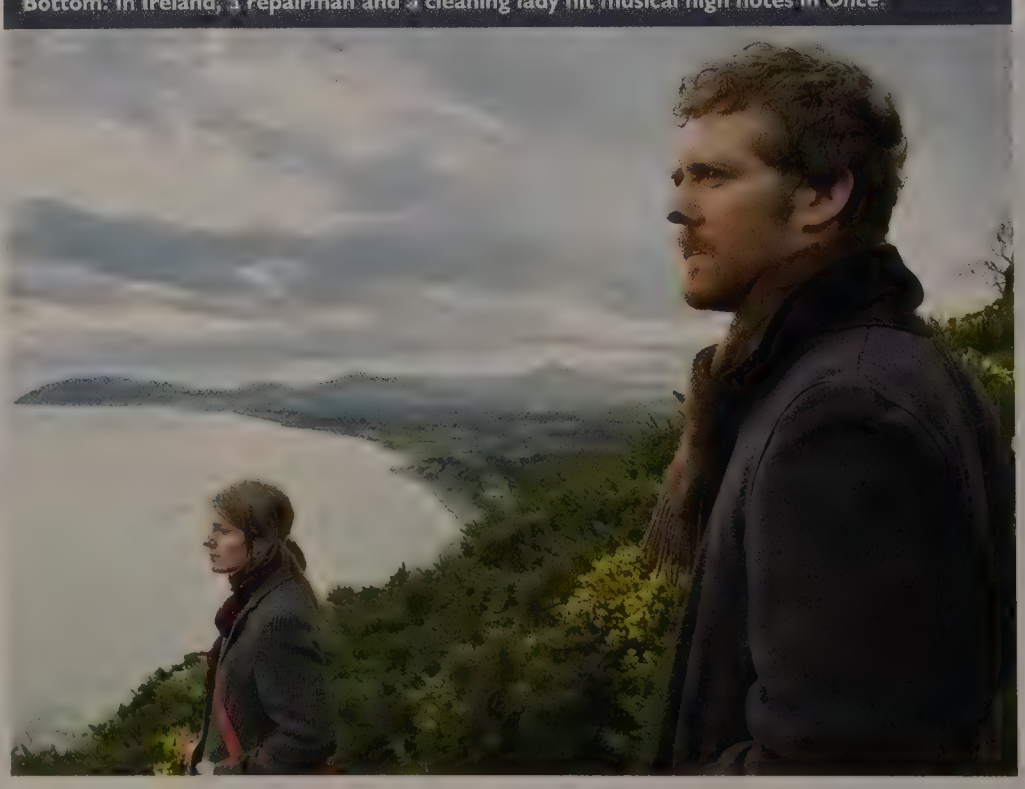
Paris Je T'aime ★★

"I didn't have the time to write you a short letter," Mark Twain once quipped, "so I wrote you a long one instead." That thought came to mind more than once during Paris, Je T'aime, a collection of 18 quickie short films about romance in the City of Lights that finds a dazzling array of world-class feature directors belly-flopping hard when trying to keep things under 10 minutes. Brevity demands an entirely different skill-set, judging from the inane vignettes by Gus Van Sant and Children of Men's Alfonso Cuarón. (The less said about Nightmare on Elm Street helmer Wes Craven's ode to Oscar Wilde, the better.) Best in show goes to Sideways' Alexander Payne, whose first-person essay by an ugly American tourist approaches something stirringly close to transcendence. The Coen Brothers continue beating up Steve Buscemi with modestly amusing results. But the nicest surprise comes from Gerard Depardieu, who simply trains his camera on Cassavetes veterans Ben Gazzara and Gena Rowlands, letting these two old pros conjure a complicated history most full-length features couldn't approach. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Pirates of the Caribbean: At World's End ★★

Visually wondrous and narratively discombobulated, this sense-deadening three-hour three-quel buries some striking, iconic visuals beneath such a tangled thicket of back-stabbing betrayals and such a muddled mish-mash of arbitrarily convoluted sea-chanty folklore, I had absolutely no idea what the hell was going on most of the time. Yes, Johnny Depp is back, even though he died in the second movie. Geoffrey Rush is also back, even though he died in the first movie. As expected from a Jerry Bruckheimer production, there are a lot of queasy ethnic stereotypes, along with the usual flag-waving and jingoistic pandering about "freedom," as if a pirate's life of looting and pillaging somehow equals democracy. Presumably the first Disney movie to ever open with the execution-by-hanging of a small child, At World's End juggles so many ludicrously over-elaborate shifting alliances and triple-crosses, it's hard to feel any affection for a cast composed of double-dealing snakes. Depp hams it up with extra vigor in multiple incarnations, seemingly acknowledging that the novelty of this particular performance already wore off a couple movies ago. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Quiet City ★★★½



One of the gems in this year's New American Independent Cinema series at the Harvard Film Archive, writer-director Aaron Katz's deceptively simple, visually ravishing girl-meets-boy story conjures a New York City of dreamy, delicate stillness. The luminous Erin Fisher stars as a lost tourist from Atlanta who befriends Cris Lankenau's mumbling Brooklyn slacker in an empty subway station after hours, and eventually the two drift through a fairly uneventful, yet strangely compelling weekend that just might lead to something more. Sure, it sounds pretty slight, and the initially off-putting improvised dialogue takes some getting used to. But Katz has a poet's eye and an ear for silence, investing seemingly banal interactions with an air of ineffable mystery, alternating between close-ups of startling intimacy and wide-open frames that find our smaller-than-life couple engulfed by their surroundings. Andrew Reed's sumptuous digital photography grants the grimy locations an almost ethereal glow, something Fisher hardly needs because she seems lit from within. Not much happens in Quiet City, and yet images and moments remain lodged in your mind for weeks afterwards. (At Harvard Film Archive July 7-8, with director Aaron Katz presenting.)

Shrek the Third ★½

I remain mystified by the appeal of these awful pictures. Maybe it's the murky colors and putty-ish, slapdash animation, or perhaps just my personal aversion to the lazy anachronisms and instantly dated pop-culture references employed by these screenwriters in lieu of actual, you know, jokes. Whatever the case, this listless third installment of the grouchy green ogre's misadventures lacks the energy to even be as annoying as its predecessors. The movie just lies there like a bump on a log. Mike Myers again ladles on a hacky Scottish accent, dripping with self-regard, going through the motions while Shrek faces impending fatherhood, career troubles and a mid-life crisis; stuff that's doubtlessly fascinating to the children in the audience. Eddie Murphy and Antonio Banderas try valiantly to provide comic relief, a tough gig when you don't have any punchlines. Justin Timberlake joins the team as a young "Artie" Pendragon, but the movie can't even muster enough interest in Arthurian legend to go anywhere with this promising idea. It's just sluggish, droopy and dead. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Top: The boys—Matt Damon, Geoge Clooney and Brad Pitt—are back in Ocean's Thirteen

Spider-Man 3 ★★

The received wisdom in Hollywood about sequels is that bigger is always better. That might be true if you're making pictures based on Disney theme-park rides, but such massively scaled productions seldom allow for the awkward little grace notes of humanity that have thus far personified Sam Raimi's Spider-Man series. Boasting no less than three deadly supervillians and an endlessly convoluted plot, Spider-Man 3 doesn't need a director, it needs a traffic cop. The screenwriters, including Raimi, his brother Ivan and Oscar-winner Alvin Sargent, eventually find themselves buried under so much exposition, Peter Parker has to watch a recap of the film's second act on the TV news. Honestly folks, if you need to summarize about an hour's worth of plot mechanics by having your hero tune into CNN, then there isn't going to be room for the wit and humor of those two earlier movies. Spider-Man 3 proves that sometimes more is a heckuva lot less. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Fresh Pond and in the suburbs.)

Waitress ★★★

Already shaping up to be the summer's sleeper hit, the directorial debut by indie-movie darling Adrienne Shelley has a loopy comic charisma that feels both ingratiating and unique. Former Felicity star Keri Russell delivers an unexpectedly sassy and endearing turn as a long-suffering, put-upon waitress in a small-town pie diner, aghast to discover that she's been impregnated by the whimpering, abusive lout of a husband (Jeremy Sisto) she was planning on leaving. Some big decisions loom on the horizon, but first comes an awkward affair with her OB-GYN (the pricelessly deadpan Nathan Fillion). Waitress is a small, screwy crowd-pleaser, full of exaggerated accents and quirky interludes, and it's largely carried off by some tart, pitch-perfect performances. Scenes are stolen left and right by Your Enthusiasm's terrific Cheryl Hines, and Sh herself appears as a mousy wallflower. But the of the bunch is Andy Griffith, playing a curm geonly customer full of cheerfully delivered in and downbeat sentiments. His happy-go-luck talism epitomizes this scrappy picture's rough-h charm. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square in the suburbs.)

Bill Janovitz brokers new business with Buffalo Tom "brothers"

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

The Amherst-bred rock class of the late '80s has reemerged recently in a big way. First there was the Pixies reunion, then the return of the original Dinosaur Jr. Now Buffalo Tom is about to release its first album in nine years.

The major difference is that Buffalo Tom never really went away, as the Boston trio reconvenes to perform at least once a year. "The demand was already there for a show or two and it was something that we enjoyed," singer-guitarist Bill Janovitz says. "The chemistry was hard to deny.

"It was more like brothers, like family," adds Janovitz, who joins singer-bassist Chris Colbourn and drummer Tom Maginnis at the Paradise July 14, one of a handful of U.S. and European dates to celebrate the release of Three Easy Pieces. "It just became clear that if we keep doing this, we need new material. Otherwise, we'll be a nostalgia act."

Buffalo Tom—Bill Janovitz, Tom Maginnis and Chris Colbourn—releases its first album since 1998.

Granted, that's nostalgia for a select audience. Despite critical acclaim and props from TV host Jon Stewart (who put Buffalo Tom next to Bruce Springsteen and Tom Waits on his short list of favorites), the band—like the Pixies and Dinosaur Jr.—never fully realized mainstream success.

With emotive rock that echoed the influence of Husker Du, R.E.M. and the Replacements as well as Boston's Moving Targets and Mission of Burma, Buffalo Tom enjoyed a few hits in "Taillights Fade," "Summer" and "Sodajerk," which was featured on the TV show My So-Called Life as well as a Nike ad with Michael Jordan. "We had mixed feelings about [the ad] back then, but nowadays bands are tripping over themselves to get in line for an ad," Janovitz says. "It's another way to get exposed and make a little bit of money."

He gets another kind of payback from playing his old anthems live. "I don't really know if 'Taillights Fade' would resonate for me if it didn't resonate for people so immediately," says Janovitz, 41. "I dig into that song a bit more, knowing what it means to other people."

Now fans can finally sink their teeth into some new tunes with the release of Buffalo Tom's first album since 1998's Smitten. Some songs, Janovitz says, "wouldn't sound out of place on any of our records. But the songs that are most interesting to me, that seem like real growth spurts, are songs like Chris' 'Pendleton.'" It was batted around and ended up with Janovitz on piano. "It sounds very austere, a very different song for Buffalo Tom. It almost sounds like a Leonard Cohen or Nick Cave–influenced type of song."

Janovitz is certainly keen on embracing more than the punk-rock form that first drove Buffalo Tom. During the group's semi-retirement, he formed two other bands, Crown Victoria and the Bathing Beauties, dipping toward country, pop and classic rock styles. Last year, Janovitz was onstage with Crown Victoria at Toad when Pearl Jam's Eddie Vedder showed up with Red Sox GM Theo Epstein (who has played guitar with Buffalo Tom at the "Hot Stove, Cool Music" benefit series) and jammed on tunes by Neil Young and the Band. "It was a blast," says Janovitz, who also wrote a recent book about the Rolling Stones' Exile on Main Street for a paperback series that lets musicians muse about great albums.

"Why I think [Exile] is the greatest rock 'n' roll record, certainly up to that point [in 1972], is that my idea of rock 'n' roll is that intersection of all those things like blues and country," he says, adding, "There's a certainly punk-rock energy and decadence to it." Not to mention the album photo of Mick Jagger and Keith Richards singing with alcohol in hand. "Here are these two guys sharing a drink at a microphone, sharing these really soulful songs. You build up this idea of what it was like and you aspire to that. It really fed into my wanting to be in a rock band."

Of course, lifestyles change. Each member of Buffalo Tom now has two kids and has supplemented musical projects with day jobs. Colbourn runs the Boston office of the booking agency Concerted Efforts; Maginnis has done editing; and Janovitz became a real-estate broker.

"It was time to think, 'What else can I do?'" Janovitz says from his Lexington home. "You look at the resume and I graduated from school in '89, then spent 12 years in a rock band. It's a big gap to convince people that I was actually learning a lot during those years about all kinds of stuff: marketing, promotion, sales, running a business and incorporation.

"Every once in a while at an open house, I get that 'You're not the Bill Janovitz that was…' 'Yeah, that's me.'" IB

improperimpersonals

If everyone kept their feelings bottled up like warm beer, we'd soon have antisocial behavior exploding all over the place and ruining the upholstery. So send us your letters of love and spleen, and we'll print them for the world to see. (Impersonals may be edited for taste, space and clarity.) Heck, it's better than making a fool of yourself in person. And IT'S FREE! Pick up a pen or keyboard (hint: we like the fact that we don't have to type up e-mailed messages) and write to:

And Glossy Paper at That!

JCM: The first wedding anniversary gift is traditionally paper. So here it is: my love for you, printed in black-and-white. I'm expecting diamonds in 60 years! XOXO,
—ASM

Kill This Mockingbird

To the "gentlemen" that sat idly by and watched me chase down a teenage jerk who threw food at me and my friends in the North End late Saturday night (early Sunday morning): I hope you all realize how hurtful it was to add insult to injury by mocking me afterwards. I hope your sisters and nieces never have to experience what I did. Also, you should be embarrassed that a woman in a babydoll dress has more courage than you ever will. It's people like you (in your late 20s no less) that make socially conscious people like myself exhausted by the idea that this world can become a better place. You make it damn hard, and you should be embarrassed by your cowardly, immature behavior. Grow up.
—Rosalia

Demons Departed

To my mother Joyce and sister Montene: This is to my mother and sister whom I love with all my heart. Always have. I myself have made a lot of bad choices that I'm not proud of in life. I blamed people I cared for and loved very much... family. I want them to know I'm sorry. I myself have dealt with demons and the insanity of addiction for a number of years. And to those who are affected with this disease: Get help, listen and learn before you lose those things we take for granted. Life is much too short. Always in my heart, —David

Scratch That Bitch

To my ex-roommate: You suck. You are essentially the worst human being that I have ever had the displeasure of encountering. At the beginning of the year, I thought we could be friends, but then I remembered that I have a strict "no bitches" friend policy. I was too nice to say this to your face, so here it is: you are a validation of why some mammals eat their young. After I'm done writing this, I'll never think about you again because you aren't even worth my time. Have a nice life... or not. Whatevs.
—Free at Last

People Still Roller Skate?

To the handsome young professional in the three-piece suit catching the 5:37 train out of North Station: Our eyes met from across the busy platform and I could hear Journey's "Don't Stop Believing" in my ears. I imagined us twirling around on roller skates like Charlize Theron and Christina Ricci, knocking into the 9-to-5-ers rushing past with overstuffed shoulder bags and cell phones in hand. Thank you for the moment of adolescent daydreaming.
—Monster

Feel Like a Nut?

Dear Sweet Solstice: Thanks for your genuine words of concern for my health, which you expressed in a recent Improper Impersonal. Too much of a good thing may be problematic. However, truth be told, I am a freak for my Almond Joy! If I am getting played by that sweet sensation, then I'm a sucker for my yummy-oui! Hey... nuts are healthy, yeah? With every fresh thought, I want it. She can spread her milk chocolate and coconut cream all over my hips, my sides, my lips and my rides! Hello! I love it. Take a shower and then start all over again! Nothing like a good nut to burn some calories and bust some stress-bunnies. For breakfast, fruit salad, bran muffin, and a cup of...

Neighborhood Nostalgia

To the North End: Could you possibly be the best neighborhood in all of Boston in which to live? You, with your unlimited supply of gnocchi, gelato and Italian gusto? You've housed me for a year now, and yet I must depart come September. How I will miss the old compagni on the corner, singing and chatting, nice enough to give a hearty hello every time I pass. How I'll long for the accordion sounds that fill the air on Hanover Street and the old woman who sells lemonade in front of Bova's. A simple trip around the corner, and there's anything I could ever need: good conversation, homemade pastries, a friendly smile or a great meal. Will I ever find another like you? Doubtful. Will you welcome me with open arms when I come back to visit? Judging from my time here, I have a feeling you will.

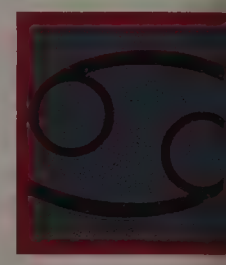
Green Line Grammar



To the inebriated Sox fans on the inbound Green Line at 10:15 on Friday night: Having been born and raised less than six miles from this lovely city, I'm pretty well acquainted with the nuances of the Boston accent. I can fake it far more believably than Robin Williams could ever aspire to. Just because I didn't feel the need to lay off my R's at that particular moment doesn't mean I can't, and I certainly don't appreciate having my pronunciation of "Park Street" corrected by a Fantastic Four of unshaven townies in beer-stained Schilling jerseys. Maybe awkward body contact in packed T cars is your favorite way to pick up chicks, but with your manners the way they are, it looks like Julio Lugo is going to score more than you this summer. Oh, and try not to stare down someone's shirt the next time you're correcting them. It kind of takes away any authority you might have been shooting for. Enjoy your time at the pahk!
—Native Daughter

Sofa King Annoying

Dear drunk friend: You should start sobering up earlier in the evening. I know that my sofa may look attractive and inviting to you, but actually, it cringes at the mere thought of contact with your freewheelin' ass. It told me so. I've tried talking nice to it. I've even resorted to bribing it with a new slipcover, but its mind is made up. What can I say? I wish it were more accommodating and all, but no dice. Your coffee is to go, and, uh, no, I will not give it a little kick. Don't let the door hit you on the way out.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

The financial restrictions imposed on you since stern Saturn entered your Leo money house two years ago may finally prove advantageous, if not totally admirable. Thank the merger between affable, artistic Venus and Mr. Traditionalist for bringing something beautiful to the table—or, since we're visualizing, to your wrist. A by-product of all the money you've saved? The Cancer-Capricorn full moon focuses even more attention on your partner's role in your relationship and how it can impact your career. Who's coming to dinner?

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

Consult with your counselor or another colleague who's in the know. While your sun ruler bumps into retrograde Mercury, there's a good chance that a piece of your past will impact your future. Although you might be able to uncover this information by yourself, anybody but another imperial Lion will have easier access to it. Besides, with magnetic Venus dominating your sign, you could be too busy basking in or warding off the attention that others, significant or marginal, are showering upon you. Try curbing the enthusiasm.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

While your Mercury ruler is retrograde, you'd do well to recall a few highlights from the past and apply them to your current career objective. Both your curiosity and cleverness can peak on June 28 when Mercury and the Cancer sun meet, but retrieving only one precious memory won't end the quest. You'll be on this case for at least another month. Also, remember to mind your manners; you need to nurture the contacts you make now so that the same folks will continue to play a supportive role in your crusade.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

You could spend the summer enjoying a relatively smooth-sailing career success or reveling in a hot social scene made even more appealing because your luxury-loving Venus ruler is parading through luxurious Leo. When the goddess meets up with establishment-friendly Saturn, the connections you make to cultural lions won't be merely coincidental but, as we stargazers say, synchronistic. Use these liaisons to further an artistic project, to add substance and structure to what has been an ongoing romantic fantasy. Hurry: Tempus fugit.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

There's a certain amount of sex appeal coming off of an attractive associate—not enough to be obvious or embarrassing, but for those whose antennae are aquiver, palpable. If you pick up on the vibe and follow through when desirable Venus favors your Pluto coruler, you'd be justified in saying that it's only natural. But if you ignore the warning signs your boss is sending, what might that cost? One more consideration: Your action-packed Mars coruler is visiting your Taurus marriage house for the first time in two years.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

What now? A legitimate concern as disruptive Uranus in your Pisces home zone changes direction for the next five months. Outer planets usually don't infringe on our personal lives, but when one settles into your nesting place, you can't help but feel stressed. Thankfully, the empathetic Cancer sun can soothe those nerves for the time being, probably with an infusion of other people's money. Assets and resources, your own and those you share, are the two areas of your solar chart featured during the Capricorn full-moon period.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

The annual Capricorn full moon often serves as a turning point for the agile Goat; however, Luna's opposition to the Cancer sun on June 30 entails other elements. There's your Saturn ruler's opposition to the fantasy created by imaginative Neptune in your money house, intensified b the romantic pie-in-the-sky Venus opposition. Retrogra Mercury is adding its 2 cents to the realizations the sun reaching about work, the people you're working with those you're living with. For some, a health matter as w

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

The self-sacrificing aspect of romantic love could transpo you to dramatic heights when Venus in Leo, your warm-hearted marriage sign, has to confront Neptune, the mar in your own sign. Venus may be able to soothe some of th harshness realistic Saturn has imposed on close relationships during the past two years, but since she'll s be moving on to Virgo, the benefits the goddess bestows, although substantial, may be short-lived. That's not to s that you shouldn't enjoy them while you have them.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Two fish, bound together but headed in opposite direct the Pisces glyph is hardly a symbol of stability. Since erratic Uranus entered your sign in 2004, the times yo spent riding on an even keel have been far and few between. Which way will the tide turn now that Uranu retrograde until Thanksgiving? And how will you deal w the second of three frustrating oppositions to your impressionable Neptune ruler from straight-laced Satu This week, add another confrontation, a challenge fror affectionate Venus. Who loves whom now?

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

A matter that has been ignored or simply forgotten abou could resurface while the Messenger strolls down memor lane, through the womb-to-tomb area of your solar chai Since retro Mercury's meeting with the tender-hearted C sun doesn't happen often, handling the subtleties—ma the subtext—of the situation could be tricky for a "stri while the iron is hot" Ram. Remember that the Capricor moon on June 30, while good for business, can focus too brightly on your reputation, dirty laundry included.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

An infusion of physical energy and Martian aggressiveness can have a noticeable impact on the smooth course your life has taken. While the red pla travels through Taurus over the next six weeks, be su use any opportunity to take charge of both your per and your professional life. This is also the optimum t to get into beach body shape because, once the trans ends, it'll be another two years until Mars rides the l again. Decorating? Since your present taste level is remarkably high, buy now, pay later.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

A good deal of the time you're on top of your game, aware of what's going on. However, when your Mercu ruler joins forces with the sun, you're liable to recog another point of view and, if Mercury is in reverse, re something about the past—more likely now since th conjunction takes place in Cancer, the sign with a sol for childhood. At the same time, unpredictable Urani turns retrograde in your career midheaven; although there may be a flurry of activity, don't assume you'll making progress.

IMPROPER sightings

UNLIKE THE REST OF YOUR FRIENDS, WE WANT TO SEE THE PHOTOS FROM YOUR NEXT TRIP.

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.

Erika Salloux and Colleen Meyer chilled by the beach in Melbourne, Australia. They considered diving into the ocean, but the water was way too shalloux.

When Mike Elkas and Katie Smith e-mailed us about going to see Paris, we were pulling for a picture from Twin Towers Correctional Facility. But we suppose France is pretty cool, too.

Cheryl Mastrogiovanni wished us well from an old prison in San Juan, and we wish we didn't already use our one requisite Paris Hilton joke.

Steve Quinn visited the Great Wall of China, where, he was happy to report, Dr. Quinn, Medicine Woman is still a smash hit. It's good to be Quinn.

While in Aruba, Andrew Berne found this great spot to watch the Sox. And if that sign's telling the truth, we hope to hell he discovered it on a Tuesday.

Kathi Polster and Paula Aschauer sent us this photo from Luzern, Switzerland, where it seems Kathi is also shooting for an appearance on the famed "Schweiz Sightings" page.

DISCO INFERNO...

If nothing else, the Institute of Contemporary Art's waterfront digs are the perfect place for a party, as proven by the annual Sapphire Necklace Gala, which was the first major hoo-ha to be held in the museum's new home.

Among the guests: überfabulous cochairs Harry and Nikki Nudelman, and Mario Russo and Frank Gilligan, the vivacious Amy Belkin, Chestnut Hillians Julie and Brent Binder, board chair Chuck Brizius and the foxy Kate, Back Bay party pair Maura Connolly and John Egan, nightlife Adonis Seth Greenberg and the babe-a-licious Kim Rearte, musician and retired tech mogul Jeet Singh squiring the stunning Geraldine Galateau, banking bigwig Ron Walker and his other half, Karen, local financial titan Peter Monaco and his brother, N.Y. financial titan Mark, the beyond beautiful Dionne Palandjian and her adoring husband, Paul, and blonde beauty Shelly Nemirovsky with her husband, Ofer.

As soon as dinner and the auction were over, everyone filtered downstairs to the auditorium, which was tricked out like a '70s-era disco, complete with lighted dance floor and go-go boys in short-shorts shaking their money-makers on raised platforms.

"I think he shaves his private parts, and I think I'm OK with that," said one woman, while the wife of a prominent lawyer climbed up on the platform and shimmied with one of them until her Manolo Blahnik's began to give way.

Meanwhile, there was the guest who said, "I barely survived Studio 54 in the '70s. I think I'd better go home."

IS THERE A DOCTOR IN THE HOUSE?

If their intent was to drum up business, the American Heart Association couldn't have done a better job than at the Heart Ball, held at the Westin Waterfront.

To begin with, the supercool, multimedia décor was heart-stopping (and possibly seizure-inducing), while the suspense of the raffle held during cocktails was enough to give anyone heart palpitations. Then there was the dinner, which ironically consisted of two—yes, two—filet mignons, prompting one guest to quip, "They should offer a free angioplasty with every meal."

On hand for the festivities were guest emcee and Today anchor Ann Curry, gala chair and financial giant Ellyn McColgan, honoree Deeb Salem, cardiologists-to-the-stars Ken Rosenfield and Larry Cohn with their delightful other halves, Janet and Roberta, real estate titan Steve Weiner and his beautiful bride, Roberta, überphilanthropist Ray Tye and the charming Eileen, power couple Steve and Barbara Grossman, dazzling jeweler Nidhi Handa, Fidelity heiress Abby Johnson, banking babe Dora Lewin, and numerous, equally fabulous others.

Two heart-healthy aspects of the evening: the free-flowing wine and the funk band that had everyone on the dance floor, including some rhythm-challenged folks who should probably have sat it out.

Meanwhile, when a friend told her that her husband wanted to dance with her, the wife of one eminent physician said, "No, he doesn't. It's just his ADD. He's a much better doctor than he is a husband."

DON'T JUST SIT THERE, DO SOMETHING...

An invitation to an Anti-Genocide Evening might sound like a total bummer, but when held in the waterfront home of social activist Doris Yaffe and cohosted by power-broker Lynne Kortenhaus it tu out to be anything but.

The purpose of the event was to rem the comfortable and complacent about horrors that go on in this world (Da being the mere tip of the iceberg), but company was as upbeat as it gets, incluc the likes of Miguel and Suki de B ganca and their wildly talented s Miguel, who performed a deeply mov song he'd written, honorees Liz Walk Gloria White Hammond, Margo St Strom and Josh Rubenstein, the st ning Hilary Minot, Haitian man-ab town Jean-Marc Nelson, fashion p Jana Reed, mustachio'd mucha Michael Stutz with white-hot Colom handbag designer Cristina Isabel, an on and so forth.

By the time the evening was over, ev one there was galvanized to go out and tually do some good in the world, whic certainly a bigger accomplishment t having a bunch of rich people dress u black tie and eat rubbery chicken f worthy charity.

As one attendee put it, "This is an cellent reminder that there are other to make a difference than just whip out your checkbook." IB

Introducing 360 Vodka

The World's First Eco-Friendly Vodka

360 Vodka is crafted from a philosophy of eco-awareness. Quadruple Distilled and Five Times Filtered, it's with an enlightened spirit, it's "The Evolution of Vodka."

Drink Responsibly. Drives Responsibly.

360 Boasts a Clean and Silky Smooth Finish

Four Times Distilled ♻ Five Times Filtered ♻ Made from the finest natural ingredients Labels made with 100% post-consumer waste paper
Vodka distilled for optimal eco-efficiency ♻ Package designed for infinite reusability Revolutionary bottle consisting of 85% recycled glass
(70% post-consumer glass)

P³ Philosophy | Product | Packaging

Philosophy - 360 Vodka is crafted from a philosophy of eco-awareness and corporate responsibility. This ideology is then manifested throughout our greener processes and greener products.

Product - The vodka in every bottle of 360 is Quadruple Distilled through a highly energy efficient process, Five Times Filtered and produced at a facility that has improved its eco-footprint measurably over the past 5 years.

Packaging - The "green" packaging that surrounds 360 Vodka is the utmost in eco. Our Eco-Audit (shown at left) details the environmental benefits of the packaging, and the logos represent the processes that were involved in the creation of 360 Vodka.

Eco-Factoids

What's Wrong

1. Annual U.S. paper demand requires nearly 1 billion trees.
2. Typical home doubles the emissions of the average car.
3. Average meal travels 1,200 miles from farm to plate.
4. You generate 4.5 lbs of trash every day.

How You Can Help

1. Recycle 36 newspapers and you can save an entire tree.
2. Turn your lights off when not in use.
3. Buy locally grown and produced food.
4. Reduce trash by mailing back your reusable 360 swing top, using our prepaid envelope, and we will make a donation to the environment.

FROM THE EDITOR

SUPERCHUNK

At 220 pages, this year's Boston's Best issue holds the distinction of being the heftiest we've ever produced. With more than 50 pages of awards in nine categories—from fashion to food and drink, bars and clubs, and sports—it has been the IMPROPER staff's obsession for the past three months.

It's Wednesday night and you want to know where the party is? Looking to impress your new crush with a memorable meal? Desperately seeking a better haircut, stylish but affordable couch, or pair of jeans that really fits? The perfect answers to all those questions are in here, along with hundreds of other superlatives.

We hope you'll hang onto this issu as your guide to the best this city ha to offer. When it comes to the topic your social life, we've got your back.

Breaks the Coda

The guys behind Common Ground in Allston have grown up. As if to prove it, they've opened Coda Bar and Kitchen in the South End. "We're 13 years older," says co-owner Jim Cochener, referencing Common Ground's age. He sums up how they've changed since entering the food business out of Boston College: "Two wives, four kids. This is someplace we'd be going into."

South Enders, they hope, will feel the same way. "We're in a different demographic down here," says co-owner Michael Moxley, "a more mature, long-staying clientele," in contrast to the largely college scene in Allston. "Also a little bit more refined," he adds.

Coda's location at Columbus and Dartmouth (hence the name), in the space formerly occupied by Tim's Tavern, may not immediately bring to mind images of sophistication. But wait till you see what've they done with the onetime dive. A long, narrow room, Coda is now half bar, half restaurant with 70 seats. Slate-topped tables, brown leather chairs, butter walls and white candles create a comfy vibe. Transformed, yes. But still a Cochener-Moxley production. We have "no pretensions about the place," Cochener stresses. "We are who we are. [We] keep it really simple."

That's evident in the menu, a short selection of affordable comfort food updated to current tastes. Take the chicken wings ($7), which get tossed in an Asian marinade and slow-roasted overnight. They come with a cilantro-soy dipping sauce. "You get wings, but they're different," explains chef/partner Simon Robinson, who manned the kitchen at Common Ground for six-plus years. "No buffalo sauce, no blue cheese in sight."

Fans of Tim's will be happy to see a burger ($9), a staple of the neighborhood joint. Other entrées (none more than $17) include roasted chicken ($15), turkey and portobello mushroom meatloaf ($13) and short ribs ($15). Sides are also familiar and fuss-free: veggies, grits, fries, greens and whipped potatoes. "We want to be able to attract people maybe once a week," Cochener says.

And not just to eat, he adds. "We're a bar as much as we are a restaurant." In addition to wine and beer, they have specialty drinks like the orange mojito and basil gimlet martini. Cocktails for adults, not the keg crowd. Grown up, indeed. Coda, 329 Columbus Ave., Boston (617-536-2632). www.codaboston.com. —Megan Lisagor

Talk to Us

Though lacking the blockbuster hype and financial bac of some summer releases, Talk To Me (see review on p 157)—which stars Don Cheadle as embattled 1960s r DJ and civil rights activist Ralph Waldo "Petey" Greer has garnered its fair share of attention, and even a l Oscar buzz. We sat down with director Kasi Lemm who grew up in Newton, to discuss the movie.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: So tell us about your introduc to Petey Greene.

Kasi Lemmons: To be honest, I'd never heard of him fore I read the script. But even the first time I read it story and his life felt familiar.

IB: And then, once you decided to make the movie, it hardly an easy road…

KL: Yes, it was difficult. We were in pre-production years ago, ready to go, and then everything fell apart Terrence Howard dropped out of the movie. Bu never quit, Don was so consistent and dedicated to ting this done. And I don't think there was anything ever wanted more.

IB: How was it working with an actor like Cheadle how does it feel as a director to hear the Oscar talk t starting to surround him?

KL: Obviously, working with him was great. It was move for an actor like Don. He had to trust me, an never wavered from that. As far as the Oscar talk, would be great, icing on the cake. But we know what of movie we made and will be proud of that either w

IB: I like how you didn't sugarcoat anything about Gre life—you focused as much on what made him great a did on his shortcomings.

KL: I like to focus on that grey area that we all hav cause that's what I think a lot of us struggle with. D that with Petey made him human and the story mor pealing.

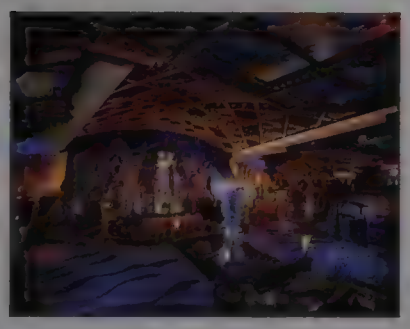
IB: So what's next for you? Anything new on the horizon?

KL: Well, yes, I do think I'll work again.



IB: Well, we know that. But how about an inside scoop?

KL: I can't say much, because nothing is for sure, but I will say that Don and I would both like to work together again. —Rich Levine

TASTY TIDBITS

More Maki and Michael Schlow

Sushi Switch… This spring, Boylston Street lost one of its sushi faves when Gyuhama closed its doors, but by late July, a new restaurant should be ready to fill the void. Samurai, from the folks who brought us Takemura in Harvard Square, will offer an assortment of sushi, plus other traditional Japanese appetizers and small plates. The 100-seat eatery, which will serve lunch and dinner daily, hopes to provide a delivery option for Back Bayers by the fall. 827 Boylston St., Boston (617-407-6300).

Our Money's on Schlow… As many Bostonians, or at least poker fiends, already know, next spring Foxwoods is expanding with the unveiling of a new MGM Grand hotel. But here's something even non-gamblers can get hyped about: Local chef Michael Schlow—of Radius, Great Bay and, most recently, Alta Strada fame—is opening a second Alta Strada there. The 8,000-square-foot Italian eatery will hold 225, complete with a chef's table, a private dining room and al fresco seating.

The Wait to Skate… When Jon Olinto and Anthony Ackil—owners of B.good—purchased an abandoned gas station in Coolidge Corner back in October, they had visions of roller-skating servers dancing in their heads. The town of Brookline had other ideas. So while B.good No. 3 is still slated to open on Harvard Street in late July, it'll do so without waiters on wheels. "Initially, it was kind of an inside joke, but then we started really thinking we could pull it off," Olinto told us. "We signed a 12-year lease, so we're not going anywhere. We'll figure it out." The burger-and-shake spot does have one cool gimmick: a retractable garage door, still intact from the building's gas station days. 455 Harvard St., Brookline. www.bgood.com.

We Hardly KnewFat Ye… KnowFat is NoMore. But before you go crying into a fresh batch of air fries, a piece of good news: It's only a name change. Over the s mer, Boston–area KnowFat Grilles, including s in Downtown Crossing and the Fenway, wil come UFood Grills, and while the menu will fea a lot of the same types of food—grilled burgers ads, wraps—the company has partnered George Foreman, who's slated to appear at son the reopenings. Visit www.ufoodgrill.com for det

It's Like Buttery… When we heard that the S End Buttery, the charming coffee shop on Shaw Avenue, set up a prepared foods case, we figu was a good idea but didn't rush right over. Th until we found out the name of the chef behin venture. Marisa Iocco, formerly of local Italian Bricco, Umbria and Mare, took over as the tery's consulting chef late this spring and ha plans for the tiny neighborhood joint. "By the end o gust, I'm hoping to create a take-out window with specials. Space is tight, but sometimes less is more. Shawmut Ave., Boston (617-482-1015). —RL

THE BOAT, PART DUH

In which I follow through on a very bad idea

I don't usually write follow-up columns, but my tale of boat obsession a few weeks back demands a revisit. I know the city has been abuzz this past month, waiting to hear how it turned out, so here's both the prequel and the sequel to that particular story.

Last winter, as part of the whole "We're married and responsible now" thing, Heather and I got a financial advisor, an amiable fellow named Bill. Bill seems to know what he's talking about and he wears a suit, which makes me fairly confident that he isn't using our retirement money to buy drugs at Burning Man. My first question for Bill was, "So when can I buy a Porsche?" He laughed. Then I said, "And when can I buy a boat?" Bill didn't laugh. "Please don't buy a boat," he said solemnly. "A boat will set back your retirement 10 years." Well, if you like this column, then I've got good news for you—it looks like I'll be writing it until I'm covering topics such as, "The youth these days have no respect," and "Why the early-bird special should be earlier." In other words, I defied Bill, Heather and common sense—I bought a boat.

Of course, with the well-intentioned idea that I'd scratch this itch as cheaply as possible, I focused my eBay energies on slightly used boats. As in, boats so old that if you found a coin in the bilge, it would probably have Queen Isabella on it. Which is how I came to be legally obligated to buy a 22-foot fishing boat with more than a few nautical miles in her wake. I could never afford a boat like this when it was new, which is partially because it was probably expensive, but mostly because I didn't make that much money when I was 11.

That's right, I'm the proud owner of a 1988 Chaparral with a 200-horsepower Johnson outboard. (As my friend Elliot pointed out, "That's a fairly big Johnson.") Here's the story that dragged me into my eBay bidding fugue: The original owner was a rich guy who lived in Europe but flew into Martha's Vineyard for two weeks each summer to seduce impressionable American girls with his posh accent and his awesome boat (in the interest of disclosure, I may have invented the second half of that sentence). So his boat only got used for 20 hours a year for the first 17 years. Then another guy on the Vineyard bought it, used it for two years, and is now selling it because he and his wife just had a baby and he has no time for it anymore. All told, it's like an almost-new 19-year-old boat!

Of course, there are a few catches. O is that it needs a trailer, a fact that I con niently ignored during the bidding proc Second, it's still on Martha's Viney which leads me to the ironic dilemm trying to figure out how to get a boat b from an island. Can anybody say, "A th hour tour?"

Oh, and there's one more thing: I have slightly misjudged Heather's p tion on the topic of boats. I placed opinion somewhere on the disdainful of apathy, but when I sprung it on that I'd won the eBay auction, I disc ered that this was wishful thinking turns out that Heather's view on boa more like that of, say, a Titanic survi Or a torpedo.

I MAY HAVE SLIGHTL MISJUDGED HEATHER POSITION. IT TURN OUT THAT HER VIE ON BOATS IS MOR LIKE THAT OF, SAY TITANIC SURVIVOR– OR A TORPEDO

I asked my new friend Arik for cou on this matter. Arik is the former own my new vessel. He replied, "My wife the same reaction but then loved this before the babe was born. I think your like it as well—lots of cushions and s for its size. Plus it has six rod holders side and six more in the cabin, so you all set!" I appreciate Arik's optimism somehow I don't see Heather saying, OK! I wasn't a big fan of this idea a outset, but that was before I realized many fishing rods it could hold."

Of course, maybe I'm being too simistic. Maybe the boat will make it fine from the Vineyard and provide ye fun and not make me look like more big jerky idiot than I already am. know is, I'm done using Craigslis eBay, the twin temptresses of unnece purchases.

But Heather's not, so if you happ see a boat for sale online that was for owned by a rich guy from Europe, plea me know. iB

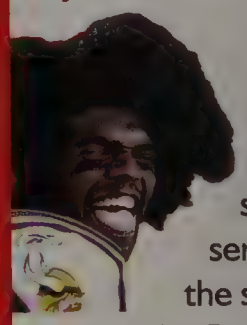
1 YEAH! WE'RE MEDIOCRE AGAIN!
Celtics fans: You either hate the trade or you love the trade—or, if you're Tommy Heinsohn, you've already forgotten it ever happened. Regardless, you've got to admit that thanks to Ray Allen, next year's squad will be undoubtedly better than they were in '06. Sure, that's an incredibly short-sighted way of looking at this situation, but are you ready to face the reality that is many more years of Celtics futility? Plus, we should probably all withhold final judgement until we see what Ainge does with Ratliff's contract.

2 THEY DON'T... HAVE... THE POWER
At last year's All-Star Break, David Ortiz had 31 HRs and Manny had 24. At press time, they had 13 and 11, respectively. Nobody seems too worried, but as Lowell, Youk and Pedroia come back to Earth, we'll need a little more pop from Papi and Captain Insano.

3 SO EASY A CAVEMAN COULD DO IT?
As much criticism as the Sox have gotten over the Lugo and Drew signings, how right were they in NOT re-signing caveman/ass clown Johnny Damon? He was decent last year, but nowadays he's all but done; his ability's receding about as fast as his hairline.



4 HOLD-OUT WATCH
It's been overshadowed by all the positives, but is anyone else a little worried about an Asante Samuel-less secondary? If Meriweather is impressive after a few weeks, let's throw him at free safety and move Eugene Wilson to corner. But who are we kidding, they'll probably just re-sign Hank Poteat.

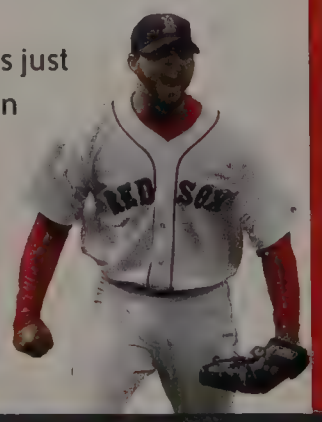
5 WELCOME ABOARD! WELL, AT LEAST UNTIL NEXT YEAR...
Claude Julien is the Bruins' fifth coach in five seasons. Jesus, B's coaches get killed off more often than Kenny from South Park.

4 DATES TO WATCH

1 JULY 12: The Red Sox start the second half with a wicked 1[8] games in 18 days. Paris Hilton begins a similar stretch today, but will substitut[e] "games" with "dudes."

2 JULY 14: The Celtics finish up the Vegas Summer League seas[on] against the Mavs. Don't know if there's much chance Sebastian Telfair's on this trip, but if so, let's make sure Pacman Jones is nowhere near Nevada.

3 JULY 26: The Pa[ts] kick off their most-anticipated training camp since the summer of '02. B[ut] seriously, can't we just start the season now? A guy can on[ly] YouTube Randy Moss so many times.



4 JULY 31: It's the MLB trade deadline. Here's hoping the Yanks don't make a run at Frank Catalanotto; he's the biggest Sox kille in the league. Well, aside from Lugo.

3 SOX THOUGHTS...

1 They've already hit more triples (18) than they did in all of 2006 (16). In related news, Vin Baker's already hit more Triple Sec this summer than he did in all of '06.

2 With one start left, Josh Beckett amazingly has just as many first half wins (11) in 2007 as he did in the first half of '06. Wins has to be one of the most overrated stats in baseball.

3 Nearly half of their September games come against Tampa Bay and Baltimore, so if they hang tough for the next two months, they'll moonwalk to the pennant.

1 WISH FOR THE NEXT THREE WEEKS...

Can't they start showing replays for controversial plays on the Fenway Park scoreboard? There's nothing worse than having to text a friend who's watching the game at home to find out how mad you should get at an umpire. By the time he texts you back, you're like Eddie Murphy in Coming to America yelling "In dee face!" long after everyone else has moved on.

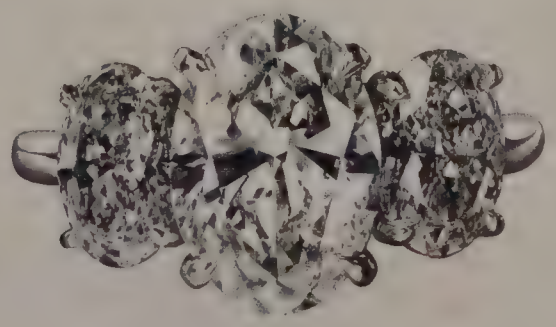
...fection has its price.



Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

THE DANCE

BY JOHN D. SPOONER

Boston's Best Golf Game

From the book of Jack

I first met Jack Nicholson at his house in 1979, just after he'd won the Academy Award for One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest. My wife and I were taken there by our producer friend, Harry, originally from Brookline. "He's just a man," Harry told us on the drive over. Then he hesitated. "Of course, at the same time, he's Jack."

Nicholson's house overlooked the sprawl of L.A., every blinking light the promise of stardom—the fool's gold of Hollywood, of course. Tuborg from the bottle was the drink of choice, and Nicholson, clad in a white suit, spoke in a kind of Esperanto, offering commentary that seemed a combination of inside jokes and Bartlett's Familiar Quotations. My wife and I, trying to say clever things, felt increasingly out of it, surrounded by Jack and part of his posse, including Anjelica Huston and the character actor Harry Dean Stanton. Conversation centered on earthquake predictions by various L.A. psychics, and who would flee where.

"So?" Harry the producer asked afterwards on our way to dinner.

"I'm glad we live in Boston," said my wife.

"Other than for sports and Jewish Chinese food," he said, "why?"

"No earthquakes," my wife said. "No psychics."

Nicholson and I caught up again while he was filming The Departed in Boston. He'd become a golf junkie, and Team Jack—the people who manage his comings and goings—arranged for him to play a round with me at one of the most historic courses in golfdom, the Country Club in Brookline. Jack brought his friend Tommy, a character who was a great chef and, I think, distrusted anyone who didn't grow up in Brooklyn. I recruited my buddy Billy, who grew up in Somerville. Billy had two golf hats made up with the club logo, as well as "Tommy" on one and "JJ Gittes" (Jack's character in Chinatown) on the other.

The morning of our match it was already almost 100 humid degrees. I got a phone call from Team Jack. "Jack says it's way too hot, got to cancel."

"Tell him we're playing later in the day, and he can't pass up playing at the Valhalla of golf, or certainly one of the Valhallas."

A few more negotiations and the game was on. Nicholson and Tommy pulled up in a white stretch. We unloaded the clubs, Jack's encased in an animal skin golf bag that looked like it had been presented to him by Idi Amin. Tommy needed size 10 golf shoes.

"No rentals at this club," I told him.

"Not to worry," said Billy, disappearing into the locker room. He came back wi saddle shoes. "Had to jimmy open a f lockers," he said. "But these should fit."

On the first tee, Nicholson looked at and said, "Johnny Boy, just to let you know don't take more than a five on any hole."

"Fine with me," I answered. Then he pr ceeded to whale the ball with his driv knocking it at least 250 down the middle. he didn't like a shot, he'd drop a few ba (all of them had "Joker" stamped on the and hit those also, all with authority.

"Jeez, he can flat-out play," said my cad

After two holes, the temperature kept ing. "I'm dyin' out here, Johnny Boy," Ja said. He was dyin'. He was in a cart wi Tommy. I was walking, the heat boiling through my shoes. But Jack was philosoph cal through the round.

On golf and acting: "I took lessons eve week for two years, and maybe hit a milli balls. All before I ever went onto a cour You see a movie, you think, 'a piece of cak But the preparation for a role takes the sa intensity as I've brought to golf. Easy is o from the outside."

At one point, Tommy hit his ball into woods. I was in the fairway. Jack swung cart around. "Hop in, Johnny Boy."

"Thanks. It's only 50 yards," I said.

"Whoever can make your life easier, yards, a thousand miles… learn to love it."

Later in the round I said to him, "Bost is such a prickly, different place, you're pro ably bugged here less than anywhere else."

"Au contraire," he said. "Just last nig Tommy and I are out to dinner with a cou of old girlfriends, and a woman comes ov She leans down and says, 'Hey, Jack, ho you like to take me in the ladies' room? A spank me?' 'Not tonight, sweetheart,' I s to her. 'But Tommy likes to do that… an can watch.'"

We came in after Jack had parred 10, and 12. Billy and I dragged our sorry bo to the clubhouse, where Jack was waiti "I've paid the caddies," he said.

"Jeez, Jack," I replied. "What about t old line in Hollywood, 'The talent ne pays'?" He flashed that killer grin at "Right," he said, then paused. "But it's OK because I'm rich."

Every time I start taking things too ously, I pick up the golf ball Jack tossed after the round. The Joker is wild.

RASHIDA JONES

BY JONATHAN SOROFF/PHOTOGRAPH BY KERRY BRETT HURLEY

On NBC's hit The Office, Rashida Jones portrays ambitious saleswoman Karen Filipelli. Born and raised in Los Angeles, Jones is t daughter of music mogul Quincy Jones and the actress Peggy Lipton. While a student at Harvard, she appeared in such plays as Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide When the Rainbow Is Enuf, Dancing at Lughnasa, The Odd Couple: The Female Vers and HMS Pinafore. She was also in Pitching to the Star at the Lee Strasberg Theatre. She made the transition to television starring on Fox's Boston Public, and her other TV credits include Freaks and Geeks, If These Walls Could Talk II, Chappelle's Show, Second Opinion and the British series Ny-Lon. She has recently completed a starring role in the independent feature film Brief Interviews With Hideous Men, costarred in Little Black Book, and her other movie credits include Now You Know, East of A and Myth of America. This fall, she'll appear in The Rules for Starting Over, a half-hour comedy by the Farrelly brothers that will air on Fox. She lives in L.A.

Jonathan Soroff: First of all, your new movie is called Brief Interviews With Hideous Men. Should I be insulted?
Rashida Jones: Depends on whether or not you consider yourself hideous.
JS: No, actually. I'm gorgeous.
RJ: We're talking about your insides. Hideous can be anything from misogynistic to disgustingly unaware of other people, egomaniacal. You fit any of those descriptions?
JS: I'm a bit of an egomaniac.
RJ: Well, if you don't know whether you're hideous, you probably are. [Laughs.]
JS: So how close is your personality to the character you play on TV?
RJ: I've definitely got some of the edge that she has, but I would hope to God that I dress a little better.
JS: Let's talk about your upbringing. Sad stories of celebrity parents?
RJ: I wouldn't dare to play anybody out, but as you can imagine, I saw a lot of bad parenting. I also saw a lot of good parenting. But the problem is that when there's bad parenting and there's the added fame, money, public-eye factor, it's a nightmare.
JS: Growing up the way you did, did you ever see the whole tabloid celebrity culture and say to yourself, "That'll never be me, I want nothing to do with that"?
RJ: Well, the truth is that it was so different when I was a kid. It wasn't as ferocious or wild. I look at it now and think, "I want nothing to do with that," but the business that I'm in, it's a prerequisite for success that people are interested in your personal life. I don't really understand that, but yeah, that's not something I'm interested in whatsoever.
JS: Was it easier or harder having celebrity parents?
RJ: I wouldn't know because I never had non-celebrity parents. [Laughs.] But I have really good parents. They're just great, so I guess that's a lot more important.
JS: What did you inherit from each of them?
RJ: Hmm. My dad: his large forehead and hopefully a little bit of musical ability and good sense of humor. I'm kind of like an exact mix of both parents.
JS: Tell me something surprising about your dad.
RJ: He doesn't go to sleep until about 6 am every morning. I guess that's not so surprising, though. He is a musician, after all.

"IT'S COOL TO BE GEEKY NOW, WHICH I'M EXCITED ABOUT, BECAUSE I DON'T KNOW HOW I'D SURVIVE OTHERWISE."

JS: Do you see yourself pursuing music?
RJ: I'd like to. The music industry doesn't appeal to me whatsoever, but I'd love to do musical things for profit.
JS: Well, you sang back-up on Maroon 5's album. Did you get paid for that?
RJ: I did. I do that a lot, actually. Can you imagine how bad it would be if I didn't get paid? [Laughs.] But music is definitely something I'm interested in doing, though the reality is that the older you get, and not being an ingénue, it gets harder. The music industry is a little chaotic right now.
JS: Would you classify yourself as a freak or a geek?
RJ: Definitely a geek. I was a good girl growing up. I didn't get drunk until college…
JS: At Harvard, no less.
RJ: Yup. Wasting my parents' money on alcohol. But I was also one of the first in my class to have a computer back when it wasn't cool to have a computer, when I was like 10 or 11. It's kind of cool to be geeky now, which I'm kind of excited about, because I don't know how I'd survive otherwise.
JS: If you had to watch porn, what would it be and why?
RJ: [Laughs.] Oh, God. I was saying the other day actually that the equivalent of what a strip club does for guys, for women would be a bunch of girls going to a place and having a guy make them laugh a lot and then tell them that they're really hot. That does the same thing to us that porn does to guys.
JS: Is modeling as hard as acting?
RJ: Honestly, this is going to sound ridiculous, but I did my first fashion shoot this week, and it was so difficult. I will admit here and now that there is a skill to modeling. They make you contort your body in all sorts of crazy, uncomfortable, unnatural ways, and then ask you to relax your face. [Laughs.] It's really hard.
JS: Tell me a secret about Steve Carell.
RJ: I don't think I know any. He's a very straightforward, lovely, lovely man.
JS: Is it weird that everybody on the show—Carell, John Krasinski, BJ Novak—is from Massachusetts?
RJ: It's not weird for me. Is it weird for Massachusetts? [Laughs.] There's a ton of connections on the show. Everyone's kind of connected, which doesn't bode well for anyone thinking there's no nepotism in the business, but the truth is that anybody who watches the show can tell that it's definitely a meritocracy and nobody's there for any reason other than the fact that they're good.
JS: So is John Krasinksi a good kisser?
RJ: [Laughs.] You can't ask me that because we've never kissed on the show, so I don't know where that's coming from. Is that a trick question?
JS: Yup, but I guess you figured it out. So you're a practicing Jew. Does that mean that you eat Chinese food on Sunday nights?
RJ: [Laughs.] I go to synagogue on high holidays. Does that make me practicing? I guess I'm more one of those despicable cultural Jews who only go for the good stuff. But I do fast on Yom Kippur.
JS: Don't all working actresses fast every day?
RJ: Yeah, but I at least put some kind of ligious premise on it, if only for a day.
JS: Ever read anything online or in a blog about yourself that was completely untrue?
RJ: I did at one point indulge in read horrible things about myself online then I realized that (a) these people d know me and (b) I shouldn't care and they're probably all 12 years old. So n try my best to avoid it.
JS: I read online that you're a big adrenali junkie: You like parasailing, bungee jumpi skydiving…
RJ: That's not true. That's something on my résumé in college when I was a tioning for roles and I have no idea ho ended up on my permanent résumé. I d like going over speed bumps in a car. I nitely don't do any of those things.
JS: So like all actors, you lied on your résu
RJ: Oh, yeah. I made a ton of shit up, ho for… actually, hoping for this—that so day someone would ask me about my acc plished bungee jumping career. [Laughs JS: What's your best feature?
RJ: Physically? My nose. I'll go with th
JS: Red carpet secrets?
RJ: Avoid them at all costs. I don't t you'll ever talk to anybody who feels c fortable on a red carpet. If they do, live in a different dimension, becaus the most uncomfortable, weird thin have people shouting your name blinding you and you're supposed to glamorous and amazing and excited blinded and screamed at.
JS: With your biracial upbringing, did yo ever eat a knish and collard greens in the s meal?
RJ: No, but because of my upbringi didn't know that collard greens had a and a "d" on the end until about five ago. I thought it was "colla greens."
JS: Is it sad that people use the designation "biracial" when in fact we're all just mutts?
RJ: I do think so, but y'know what gonna change so much that in 50 y designations won't be made related to JS: Last question: When you finally direc what will it be?
RJ: [Laughs.] Probably traffic. I'd m better producer than a director. IB

WHEN IT COMES TO CERTAIN THINGS, "the best" is obvious.

Diamonds? D-flawless.

Racehorse? Seabiscuit.

Way for pseudocelebrities to score headlines? Die or go to rehab.

Then there are the subjective "bests," the ever-changing superlatives that, in a city as dynamic and kinetic as modern go-go Boston, shift like the winds that dictate landing patterns at Logan.

That's why we're here. Every year, we take stock of what's what, what's hot, what's new, what's not, what's in, what's out, what's on the up-and-up, what's no longer what it once was, and we come up with our annual roster of the best the city has to offer.

Of course, there's a method to our madness, which is basically to get other people to do all the work for us. In anticipation of this issue, we plan a killer dinner party someplace unspeakably cool, with a wish list of a guest list. This year, we took over the newly reinvented Rialto at the Charles Hotel (thanks to chef Jody Adams!) and invited a panel of judges to vote on the various categories.

Our judges for 2007 included: Chelsea Clock owner JK Nicholas, tastemaker and Webmistress Lisa Pierpont (of Boldfacers.com), celebrity chef Michael Schlow (of Radius, Via Matta, Alta Strada and Great Bay), accessories designer Hadley Pollet (who launched the current craze for trippy grosgrain belts), syndicated advice columnist (and daughter of Ann Landers) Margo Howard, hospitality kingpin Darryl Settles (of Bob the Chef's and the Beehive), Channel 5 anchor Anthony Everett (of Chronicle and all those white teeth), professional fundraiser Janet Goff (of the New England Conservatory), nonprofit prophet David Waters (of Community Servings), blonde goddess Heather Walker (of the Celtics), fashion avatar Harley Bilzerian, good times executive Eric Aulenback (of the Lyons Group), salon owner William George (of James Joseph Salon and Studio), hotelier Tim Brett (of the Pyramid Hotel Group), WGBH personality Emily Rooney (of Greater Boston), alt-rocker Adam Ezra (of his eponymous band), Gallic funboy Cedric Tonello (of Cartier), soignée socialite Susan Spooner, TV and film producer Dot Aufiero, jewelry designer Tonya Chen Mezrich, comedian Tony V, and members of our crack editorial staff.

Then we plied them with alcohol and delicious food to pry open their craniums and determine the winners. Once the hangover cleared, ballots were collated, votes tallied, conflicts of interest taken into account and our knowledgeable staffers consulted.

Mirabile dictu! Our annual list of the very finest in this, our fair city!

Finally came the toughest part, writing it all up, for which we relied on the following beloved, ink-stained wretches: Ezra Dyer, Julie Hatfield, Carmen Nobel, Marni Elyse Katz, Elizabeth Bomze and yours truly. In addition, we couldn't have done it without the research and writing of our woefully overworked and underpaid (as in not) but deeply appreciated interns: Stephanie Chaisson, Elizabeth Gormley, Kris Johnson, Julia Spiro and Kim Jones, who did a yeoman's job and much of the heavy lifting.

Whether you agree with our choices or not, we hope you enjoy our 2007 Boston's Best issue.

We tried our best. —Jonathan Soroff

Food & Drink

AMERICAN
Central Kitchen

MANY A NEW restaurant sets out to turn the locals into regulars; Central Kitchen has actually succeeded. The neighborhood joint delivers delicious American fare time and again. And again. The assiette of vegetables, mussels and steak frites alone begs repeat visits. Other dishes demand attention, too (see the butcher's mixed grill and confit of duck leg). The menu changes with the seasons, so just when you can't bear another day of winter, Central Kitchen brings you back to Boston with melt-in-your-mouth short ribs. Also soothing your soul is a wine list, with more than 150 selections. The waitstaff will happily steer you to a good choice. And no pretensions: Strictly a dinner joint, the small eatery eschews flash in favor of spare furnishings and low lighting. Here, good food and drink is enough. (Sample vino at the bar until 1 am on weeknights, 2 am on weekends.) Seriously, this place may never have an off night. 567 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, 617-491-5599, WWW.ENORMOUS.TV/CENTRAL

Burger
MR. BARTLEY'S BURGER COTTAGE

YOU'D HAVE to order half a dozen trendy miniburgers to get anywhere near the piece of meat they serve up at this classic joint. Sometimes a burger just needs to be a whopper, though Joseph Bartley raised the bar far beyond fast food nation when he opened Harvard Square's bumper-stickered burger cottage nearly 50 years ago. Other than occasionally updating the names of his 20-odd, politically charged flavor formulas—the Ted Kennedy really is plump and liberal—Mass. Ave.'s burger king hasn't made many changes, except to throw in a few healthy imposters like turkey and veggie patties. The frappes are still thick enough to stand a spoon in. The sweet potato fries are still hand-cut. And you still have to be courteous to your burgermates at the next table, in case you need to borrow the communal jar of pickles. 1246 MASS. BAKERY: Breads
Iggy's Bread of the World

IT ALL STARTED with a single oven. Thirteen years ago, Igor Ivanovic had a French baker's hearth installed in his bakery—at the time, a converted garage in Watertown. Close to a decade later—and after a successful run in Marblehead—he and his wife, Ludmilla, opened their state-of-the-art Cambridge facility (in the old King Arthur Flour warehouse), where numerous ovens continue to churn out their beloved rustic franceses and ficelles, buttery brioche and croissants, and locally famous whole wheat bagels. No doubt, the number of Bostonians who haven't broken bread baked in this former mom-and-pop boulangerie is few; even if you don't frequent the Fawcett Street storefront, Iggy's breads aren't exactly hard to come by. You can pick up a loaf at Whole Foods, several of the summer farmers' markets and many local grocery stores. 130 Fawcett St., Cambridge, 617-491-7600, WWW.IGGYSBREAD.COM

BAKERY: Cakes
Cakes to Remember

ELLEN BARTLETT may not hold a degree from the Culinary Institute of America or have apprenticed in a Parisian patisserie—in fact, she's virtually self-taught—but she knows a thing or two about crafting cakes. Nearly two decades ago, Brookline struck it rich when it acquired her by-appointment, boutique cake shop on the south side of Route 9 (though its simple picture window and light green awning maintain a no-fuss, low profile). There's no retail case, counter or tables to sit at. Unlike most patisseries, Cakes to Remember works collaboratively with clients to personalize each wedding or large-scale confection with hyper-sophisticated flavor combinations—orange pistachio, for example, or a show-stopping classic wedding white—and the crème de la crème of ingredients. Brides, be sure to book her well in advance; this modest storefront is hardly a well-kept secret. 248 Cypress St., Brookline, 617-738-8508, WWW.CAKESTOREMEMBER.BIZ

BAKERY: Cupcakes
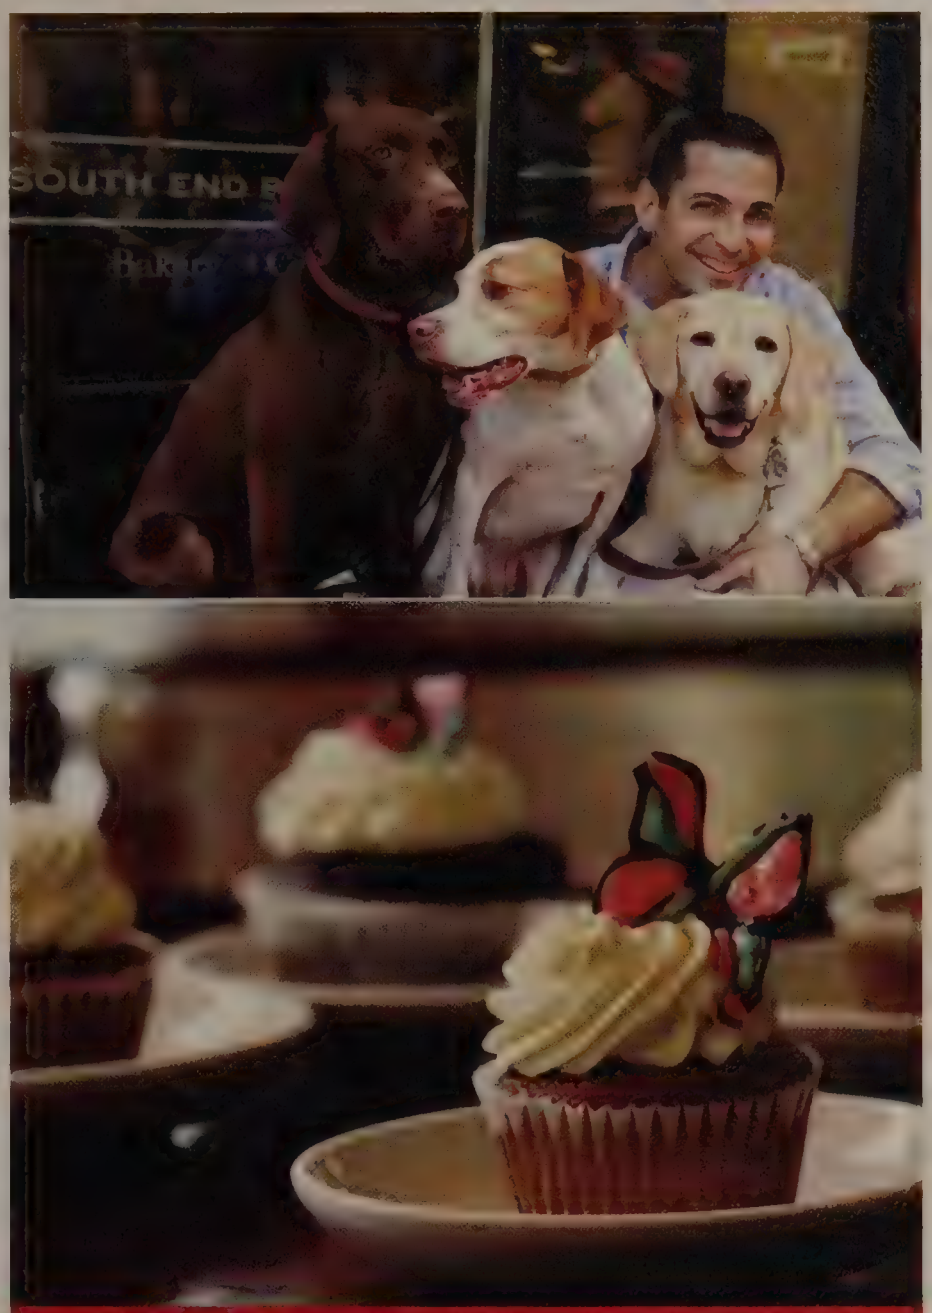
South End Buttery



DAINTY BISTRO TABLES? Check. Designer coffee? Of course. Dog treats by the door? Naturally. Signature cupcakes? Well, it would hardly be a South End café without them, now would it? What sets the Buttery apart from the plethora of cute-as-a-button shops in the area is their trio of signature cupcakes: Madison (vanilla), Simon (devil's food) and Harriet (carrot cake with cream cheese frosting). No, they're not an offshoot of Alvin and the Chipmunks, but rather the names of the owners' three dogs. But the sweetness doesn't stop there; $3 may seem pricey for such a simple confection, but before you blame it on South End prices, just know that a portion of the cupcake sales goes to local animal shelters. Yup, there's the "aww!" factor you were waiting for. Are you listening New Yorkers? You can have your Magnolia cupcakes. 314 Shawmut Ave., Boston, 617-482-1015, WWW.SOUTHENDBUTTERY.COM

BAKERY: Doughnuts
Appleton Bakery Café

NOT THAT the neighborhood is exactly lacking in charming food spots, but when this café came on the scene nearly a decade ago it certainly added that precious, boho-chic element to the corner of Dartmouth and Appleton. Devotees don't deny that you could easily (and very happily) feed off of their clever menu—10 of the signature sandwiches wittily take their names from apple varieties—for all three meals, so long as you get there early enough to grab a doughnut (or, if you've got enough of your faculties to call ahead, they just might put one aside for you). They do only one variety—buttermilk. Plucked fresh from the oil and generously dredged in cinnamon-sugar, these plump, still-warm rings rival the likes of anything you get in October at Honey-Pot Hill Orchard or Cider Hill Farm. Plus, a handful of their munchkins makes a great snack for the walk home. 123 Appleton St., Boston, 617-859-8222, WWW.APPLETONBAKERY.COM

BAKERY: Sticky Buns
Flour Bakery + Café

IF EVERYONE followed Joanne Chang's advice and ate dessert first, life would, indeed, be sweeter—especially if each day commenced with one of this pastry prodigy's sticky buns. Resisting the likes of sugar brioche buns, flaky croissants and Chang's signature banana bread, chockfull of walnuts, is tricky enough, if not downright daunting. You'll be lucky if you escape without an armful of pastries. But when your eye catches that tray of oversized dough rounds, swirled with cinnamon and practically drenched in runny caramel and toasted pecans—well, that's when you'll throw in your diet card, hand over a few bucks, and slump blissfully into one of Flour's chairs and think, yeah, life is sweet. 1595 Washington St., Boston, 617-267-4300, Boston; 12 Farnsworth St., Boston, 617-338-4333; WWW.FLOURBAKERY.COM

BAR FOOD
B-Side Lounge

IT'S REALLY a no-brainer. Smart bar managers recognize that where the drink orders flow constantly, food orders will follow. And while the majority of neighborhood haunts satisfy their patrons' beer munchies with paltry airplane snacks like peanuts, popcorn and pretzels, a select few spots, including Kendall Square's beloved B-Side Lounge, wisely opt to consider heartier items (that reap a heartier profit): fried calamari, for example, or a single braised short rib served with a scallion pancake. Or the obvious winner: a cast-iron skillet brimming with baked gouda and roasted garlic cream, complete with toast points for dipping. And for those who've tapped their tabs on Sidecars and Friscos, there's always the quirky rack of hard-boiled eggs, gratis. 92 Hampshire St., Cambridge, 617-354-0766, WWW.BSIDELOUNGE.COM

RAW BAR
Neptune Oyster

CHEF David Nevins doesn't trace his roots to Sicily or Bologna. He doesn't start the day by coddling his own mozzarella or rolling out ropes of gnocchi. He serves one or two pasta dishes (gasp!). But nobody can claim this tribute to the New England seacoast isn't just as much a Salem Street gem as neighbor Antico Forno. North Enders were happy to keep this oyster oasis a secret as long as possible—that lasted all of week. Here's the place to dip your spoon into authentic clam chowder. (The brothier kind without all the cream.) And somehow, Nevins shucks enough Wellfleets and Duxburys (generally about 12 varieties) to keep the masses happy as clams. Now that's what we call raw talent. 63 SALEM ST., BOSTON, 617-742-3474, WWW.NEPTUNEOYSTER.COM

BISTRO
Bouchée

"SOMMES-NOUS à Paris?" is what you'll ask yourself as you walk down Newbury Street and approach this elegant and traditional French brasserie. In answer to your question, no, we aren't in Paris; however, Bouchée can understandably make you feel otherwise. An impressive wine list includes many interesting choices to fuel long hours of eating, sipping and chatting. The menu reflects traditional favorites, including coq au vin ($19) and a duck confit and lamb sausage-filled cassoulet ($26). Entrées on the lunch menu, which includes a tasty chicken salad, range from $12 to $18. But our favorite menu item (dessert, natch) is the crepes mascarpones, bursting with fruit. The relaxed and elegant atmosphere includes Parisian lamps and a patio that glistens in the sunshine. Visitors can choose between two levels of indoor seating, the patio or the bar area. And for those who opt for the outdoor café, you're guaranteed to spy un beau garçon or une belle fille among the passing crowd. 159 Newbury St., Boston, 617-450-4343, WWW.BBRGINC.COM/BOUCHEE/1.HTM

Bouchée serves hearty French fare.

BRAZILIAN
Muqueca

SHORT OF HOPPING a flight to Rio, this is the best way we know to experience the exoticism of Brazilian cuisine. The bright, salmon and orange walls and multitude of plants will make you feel like you've stepped into a tropical rain forest instead of a restaurant. Although they specialize in traditional Brazilian dishes, the chefs have narrowed their offerings even further to focus on seafood, and while Brazilian food commonly evokes the idea of the endless meat available at a churrascaria, Muqueca's coastal specialties never fail to delight. The deep-fried red snapper and signature fish muqueca are among our favorites, as is a tropical juice bar that boasts more than 20 mixtures. Espirito Santo in southeastern Brazil is where most of these authentic Brazilian recipes originated, and Muqueca has adopted the traditional method of cooking in clay pots, allowing food to be served hot and sizzling. Affordable prices, delivery service and a child-friendly atmosphere are added pluses. Perhaps most telling, it's hugely popular with the area's Brazilian community, which we take to mean it's not just good but authentic. 1093 Cambridge St., Cambridge, 617-354-3296, WWW.MUQUECARESTAURANT.COM

BRUNCH
Union Bar and Grille

TUCKED INTO THE SOWA area of the South End, this sophisticated American bistro serves delicious fare far superior to your run-of-the-mill eggs benedict and French toast. Boasting favorites like B-52 French Toast, served with orange marmalade and smoked bacon, they add a clever twist on the old stand-bys. Brunch is served from 10 am to 3 pm on weekends, so you can sleep in and dine at a civilized hour. A $10 prix-fixe menu is available all day Saturday, and Sunday from 10 to 11 am. The more extensive à la carte menu is also reasonable, with dishes ranging from $8 to $13. If you need a little hair of the dog, try the Union Pimosa, a cool blend of Mumm Demi-sec and pomegranate purée. The interior design is sleek yet sumptuous, thematically proving the saying "opposites attract," as pine floors contrast with the steel and glass wall that divides the restaurant and bar, and black furniture stands out against neutral walls. One of the best reasons we know to roll out of bed on the weekends. 1357 Washington St., Boston, 617-423-0555, WWW.UNIONRESTAURANT.COM

BURRITO
Anna's Taqueria

NO CULTURE has perfected the art of hand-food better than that hook of land just south of the border, and no Boston-based taqueria wraps up a beefier (or vegetable-ier) burrito (that American favorite) than Anna's. If you can stop your hands from defaulting over to the tortilla chips and addictive guacamole (which could easily hold its own Boston's Best category), you can opt for just-griddled vegetables, slow-roasted meats, chili verde or just some classic beans and rice before they really overstuff that fresh flour tortilla with the rest of the kitchen sink. Fast food fixin's like lettuce, tomato and onion commingle with homemade beans, salsa and hot sauce in this Cal-Mex cantina; and for those who think they can handle the full enchilada—a heaping mound of rice and cheese—upgrade your meal ticket (for about 85

CAPPUCCINO
Caffé Vittoria

ONE OF THE FIRST Italian coffee shops to land in Boston in 1929, Caffé Vittoria's decades of experience and well-trained staff make its cappuccino the best of its kind. The rich, aromatic pick-me-up they serve here comes in three varieties. The regular is hot and foamy, made with carefully steamed milk and espresso, then garnished with powdered chocolate. The cappuccino freddo rules in summer: a mixture of cold milk and espresso, also topped with powdered chocolate. Then there's the decaffeinated option—stop in after dinner for a cup and still sleep like a baby. Your waistline will appreciate that all three can be made with skim milk (but they're always served in the traditional cup and saucer). So go ahead and splurge on a fresh pastry and enjoy a little taste of Italy without touching your passport. 290-296 Hanover St., Boston, 617-227-7606, WWW.VITTORIACAFFE.COM

CHEAP EATS
Orinoco

FRUGALITY DOESN'T GET you far in the food world these days. Three bucks won't buy a lick of an ice cream cone; heck, even a cup of coffee can run you more than a proper breakfast. So when a hospitable guy like Andres Branger decided to team up with a talented chef like Carlos Rodriguez, what we got were a lot of firsts: first-rate Nuevo-Latino fare, puzzlingly friendly waitstaff (is this really Boston?), and the opportunity to order both food and drink (try the tropical fruit-infused sangria) without dipping into our 401(k). No surprise, then, that this charming Venezuelan taguarita, with its rough-hewn carpentry, candy-colored chairs and open kitchen, bursts at the seams just about every night of the week (it's closed Mondays). Regular cravings include Rodriguez's hand-stretched arepas—the mozzarella-like Guayanesa cheese and tender, shredded pork versions need no introductions—flaky empanadas, hearty salads, sandwiches and traditional treats like sweet plantain-wrapped cheese, none of which will run you much more than a Happy Meal or a bagel and schmear. 477 Shawmut Ave., Boston, 617-369-7075, WWW.ORINOCOKITCHEN.COM

CHINESE
Bernard's

TAKE ROUTE 9 (aka Boylston Street) to the Mall at Chestnut Hill. Drive around back to the second floor. Bang a left when you get inside the door. It's the classy place—the one across from Papa Razzi—with tastefully upholstered seating and a bushel of to-be-trimmed snow peas piled on a back table. An unexpected (albeit posh and pricey) place to find tasty Chinese food? Definitely. But then again, who wrote the rule that the only wontons worth their wrappers come from a Chinatown dive? Whether or not Barneys and Bloomingdale's are on the agenda, stopping into Bernard's for their famous crab rangoon—perfectly crisp and full of cream-cheesy crab goodness—al dente, vibrantly green stalks of sautéed Chinese broccoli, or an order of beef with basil in hot pepper sauce (really just brightly punched up with minced fresh chilis) is always well worth the trip. Just beware the lure of retail therapy; casually strolling the mall while you wait for a table could blow your lo mein budget. The Mall at Chestnut Hill, 617-969-3388

COCKTAIL TREND
Tequila

USED TO BE THAT the only way to get your fill of tequila in this town was to order up a sugary margarita or strap on the training wheels and force down a harsh, vomit-inducing shot. But nowadays, tequila options, from bright silvers to the aged añejos, are as classy and diverse as Scotches and whiskeys on many local menus. Spots like Cottonwood Café, Masa and Olé Mexican Grill all offer tequila flights to appease any discerning palate (and price range). Then there's the newly opened Sushi-Teq, a sophisticated Japanese eatery at the InterContinental Hotel, which pairs their fare with a menu of nearly 70 different tequilas. And even though it may be slightly passé (at least for the serious tequila toker), there's never any shortage of creative twists on the margarita to keep us interested. Om offers tequila house cocktails like the Mexican—a mix of Ron Matusalem Gran Reserva El Jimador Tequila with lime and honey—and the Magenta Margarita—a blend of tequila, pear purée, cointreau and lime juice, and there's always old reliable: the Cactus Club's Horni Margarita. It seems that Bostonians have finally figured out what Mexicans have known all along: ¡Viva tequila! ¡Viva tequila!

GUARANTEED GREAT MEAL:
Downtown/Financial District
Radius

LOCATED IN Dewey Square, this fine-dining establishment is as elegant as they come and yet supremely comfortable. With its red and grey décor and unparalleled waitstaff, it's like eating dinner in the home of a childhood friend who somehow made $1 billion. The large circular dining room explains the name, and head chef/co-owner/all-around alchemist Michael Schlow's menu is as unpredictable as New England weather. Incorporating seasonal ingredients and creating new specials when he's tired of the old, he's endlessly inventive. The French-inspired cuisine is decidedly modern; and yes, it's undeniably pricey, but worth every penny. Favorites include loin of veal, pan-seared sea bass and goat cheese–huckleberry cheesecake. Or you can always opt for one of the three prix-fixe tasting menus: market, vegetable and Deluxe Chef's. Big shots are routinely seen dining here—not a surprise given Radius' Financial District location. An added plus: Their classes will have you cooking like a Cordon Bleu–trained chef. 8 HIGH ST., BOSTON, 617-426-1234, WWW.RADIUSRESTAURANT.COM

COFFEE SHOP
Boston Beanstock Coffee Co.

THE SMELL of freshly brewed coffee is an unmistakable siren song, and it hits you before you open the door of this unique coffee shop. Once you're inside, the aroma of exotic beans fills your nostrils and stokes the need for caffeine. Nestled in the cobblestone streets of the North End, it's trendy yet traditional, attracting both regulars from the neighborhood and visitors from afar. Open at 6 am on weekdays and 7 am on weekends, they keep serving java until 9 pm every night. Their house blend is a mixture of mild Central and South American beans, while the North End Blend is a slightly higher-test mix of medium- and dark-roasted beans from Central America. Of course, they don't neglect flavored-coffee drinkers, and the options—which include chocolate raspberry, French vanilla and pumpkin pie—are brewed with 100 percent Colombian beans. Enjoy your steaming mug with one of their signature panini or breakfast sandwiches. The interior is homey, resembling a typical family room, and the art on the walls rotates every two months. Make sure to stop at the ATM beforehand, as they accept cash only, but feel free to bring your laptop to enjoy the free wireless. Take that, Starbucks! 97 Salem St., Boston, 617-725-0040, WWW.BOSTONBEANSTOCK.COM

COMFORT FOOD
Bob's Southern Bistro

BOB AND DOTTIE Morgan must be proud to know that their once-small nightclub food counter tucked away in Boston's South End—which wasn't then the coveted land of cupcakeries and cobblestone walkways that it is today—has grown to become this town's premier spot for hallowed New Orleans cuisine and Sunday jazz brunch. OK, so Columbus Ave. doesn't exactly scream Bourbon Street. But when you need a little N'awlins lovin'—and by lovin', we mean that slow, sensual, rib-sticking kind of fare that us Yankees can only envy as home cookin'—in between your Mardis Gras visits, this shrine to soul food and crooning musicians (present owner Darryl Settles initiated a strong relationship with Berklee) is your NOLA-North destination for mustard-fried catfish strips, shrimp étouffée, collards and, of course, must-haves like jambalaya and hurricanes. 604 Columbus Ave., Boston, 617-536-6204, WWW.BOBSSOUTHERNBISTRO.COM

DELI
Barry's Village Deli

THERE ARE BOSTONIANS who believe you need to drive all the way to New York to find a decent, authentic Jewish deli. They don't know about Barry's. Since 1970, the Rodman clan has been dishing out the best pastrami, brisket, corned beef, knishes, chopped liver, bagels with lox and every other deli specialty you can think of from their cozy nook in Newton. On weekends, the place is jammed with émigrés from the western suburbs enjoying the foods their forebears made famous. In addition to table service and take-out, they do large deliveries and catering (in fact, we know a woman who goes to any funeral or bris where she knows the food will be from Barry's). Whether you want kishke or knaidlach, theirs is the tastiest. Just like your Bubbe used to make, except it's served with a smile instead of a side order of guilt. 6 Windsor Road, Waban, 617-527-8244, WWW.BARRYSVILLAGEDELI.COM

DESSERT
Finale

NOTHING SAYS indulgence quite like Finale's warm, plush décor: crimson upholstered couches, fine table linens, candlelight, sweet cordials. Oh, and a big plate of Chocolate Paradise. With the almost-exclusively dessert chain's success sweetening by the year (lunch and "prelude" menus includes salads, flatbread pizzas and other light fare), Finale upped its Park Plaza and Harvard Square duo to a trio last year with a Coolidge Corner storefront. No surprise, really; "dessertery" as a concept is pretty much a home run in anyone's book, and serious sweet tooths hardly need an excuse to venture out for chocolate anything—the Manjari Mousse in its pool of apricot purée, perhaps, or the signature Molten Chocolate, classically gooey and coupled with a scoop of coffee gelato. Finally, a place where you'll break no rules by ordering dessert first. 1 Columbus Ave., Boston, 617-423-3184; additional locations in Brookline and Cambridge; WWW.FINALEDESSERTS.COM

DIM SUM
China Pearl

IF YOU'RE ONE of those gastronomes who teeter on the verge of obsessive indecisiveness at the sight of a restaurant menu—did you identify with Janeane Garofalo in The Truth About Cats and Dogs?—look no further than the yellow dim sum flyer at this second-story Chinatown gem. Granted, neither communal dining nor tasting-portion plates are new (or even exclusively Cantonese) concepts—Spain popularized tapas, Italy enjoys enotecas, England boasts high-tea parlors—but dim sum–style dining at this grand hall combines only the best parts of eating out: appetizers and desserts. Even when it's not Sunday brunch, throngs of barbecued pork bun aficionados crowd the tables and watch the well-established trolley system of pushcarts—a real-life movable feast—make its way around the dining room to their stations. No cart makes it back to the start without stopping to shed at least a few bamboo steamers of dumplings (there are five varieties, you see). Even when you're struggling through that chow foon roll and your stomach is advising you to throw in the napkin, you can't help but look on to round two, or three, or four… 9 Tyler St., Boston, 617-426-4338, WWW.CHINAPEARLRESTAURANT.COM

DINER
Mike's City Diner

GRITS ARE DECIDEDLY underappreciated up North, but not at this not-so greasy spoon that shares a wall with Ken Oringer's Spanish shrine, Toro. The down-home comfort food staple—fluid and dolloped with a thick pat of butter—has equal side-item footing with the checkered diner's red bliss home fries. Needless to say, this borderline-chic breakfast joint isn't your run-of-the-mill hangover cure. Or is it? All the essentials are there: Griddlecakes are the diameter of a dinner knife, waitresses pour coffee almost before you've settled in your chair, and each table sports one of those pour-spouts of pancake syrup (no maple trees tapped around here). But let's be honest: You'd be hard-pressed to find apple-walnut pancakes headlining any other specials board. Not to mention a section of local tributes, like the Southender and East Springfield omelets, or the Emergency Room and Intensive Care breakfast specials—likely shoutouts to all the Boston Medical Center MDs that stop in. Or maybe just a good-humored warning: Here's hoping that heap of corned beef hash doesn't land you in the ER. 1714 Washington St., Boston, 617-267-9393, WWW.MIKESCITYDINER.COM

FRENCH
L'Espalier

OOZING ELEGANCE, this restaurant is the result of a gifted chef (owner Frank McClelland) and a beautifully designed Back Bay townhouse. High ceilings, large windows, a marble fireplace and an imposing mantle give it a warm, inviting and sophisticated atmosphere. Three separate dining rooms—the front room, the salon and the third-floor library—are luxe without being stuffy. Patrons typically choose one of the prix-fixe menus, starting at $24 for lunch and $75 for dinner. At dinner, these offer a choice of three courses or a degustation tasting, both of which can be paired with wines. Ordering à la carte is an exercise in choosing between the superb and the phenomenal. A lunch favorite is the BLT, which stands for bacon, lobster and tomato, served with avocado butter. (If you want to learn how it all comes together in the kitchen, enroll in a master class.) Wine Mondays at L'Espalier erase those "Manic Monday" feelings and include a four-course tasting menu paired with unforgettable wine. While it's certainly earned its reputation for being a bit pricey, L'Espalier is an abject lesson in "you get what you pay for"; what you get couldn't be better. 30 Gloucester St., Boston, 617-262-3023, WWW.LESPALIER.COM

GREEK
Desfina

IN THE FILM My Big Fat Greek Wedding, the character Gus Portokalos says, "There are two kinds of people—Greeks, and everyone else who [wishes] they [were] Greek." That's certainly so with anyone who tastes the delicious food at this traditional Cambridge eatery. Named after a town in Greece, it's decorated with long tapestries and pastel blue walls that transport you to the Old Country. Don't be alarmed by the loud voices coming from the kitchen—that's the customary good-natured bickering of the chefs. Their signature appetizer is served with a side of entertainment: The Saganaki OPA! is a thick wedge of kefalograviera cheese that's floured, fried and set ablaze at your table, leaving a nice dipping sauce for bread. For your main course, there's a variety of moderately priced meat entrées as well as old family recipes like the mousaka, sautéed eggplant and ground meat topped with béchamel sauce. Don't forget to save room for the mouth-watering homemade baklava. The enthusiastic (and yes, loud) staff will ply you with food, but don't bother asking for the secret family recipes. 202 Third St., Cambridge, 617-868-9098, WWW.DESFINA.COM

Mistral

HAVING RECENTLY celebrated its 10th anniversary, Mistral is still the go-to spot for a great meal in the Back Bay. Chef Jamie Mammano and his crack kitchen staff turn out pitch-perfect Mediterranean French-inspired food, which is presented with unannoying flourish by one of Boston's finest waitstaffs. Be sure to try the grilled tenderloin of beef with (to-die-for) horseradish whipped potatoes, garlic toast and asparagus, or the grilled wild king salmon with maitake mushrooms and smoked bacon. An expanded dessert selection is available Fridays and Saturdays on the late-night menu, and the award-winning wine list holds a host of treasures. Add to that pizzas that equal anything Naples has to offer and a lively bar scene, and it's obvious why this place is our default setting when someone suggests meeting in the Back Bay. 223 Columbus Ave., Boston, 617-867-9300, WWW.MISTRALBISTRO.COM

No. 9 Park

BARBARA LYNCH is all over Beantown's street map these days. B&G Oysters at 550 Tremont St. Facing that, the Butcher Shop's charcuterie and primo wine at 552 Tremont. A soon-to-launch-triad of gastronomica at Fort Point. Her name will even grace the cover of a cookbook come spring 2008. But it was her original perch overlooking the Common—perhaps more specifically, the meticulously appointed wine list, or the downy, prune-stuffed gnocchi capped with seared foie gras that Lynch penned within these 19th-century mansion walls—that really put this beacon of French and Italian cookery at the top of foodies' must-try lists. Now in its ninth year, Park Street's ninth brownstone is as much an institution of haute cuisine as biggies like Locke-Ober, Aujourd'hui and L'Espalier. Of course, day-boat scallops, confit veal breast and this posh pile of bricks command Beacon Hill prices. But those whose budgets hail from more modest quarters shouldn't overlook "bargain" bets like hand-cut orecchiette on the café menu. 9 Park St., Boston, 617-742-9991, WWW.NO9PARK.COM

Fugakyu

IF CROWDED doorways and double-parked cars are any indication of popularity, it's safe to say that Brookline's multilevel sushi sanctuary is practically a neighborhood mecca. (Unless you want to huddle by the flagstone fishpond for a good hour, don't bother walking in on a Friday night without a reservation.) From early lunch hours until 1:30 am (well past this borough's bedtime), sushi aficionados slide into screened booths and delve into svelte platters of raw fish classics—nigiri fingers, sashimi filets and orderly rows of makimono (including a particular nori wrap of lobster, tobiko, a trio of vegetables and spicy mayo dedicated to Fenway's imported flamethrower). Mondays and Tuesdays from 5 to 8 pm, bellying up to the bar offers a glimpse of your fish while it's still on the boat—the kaiten boat, that is. 1280 BEACON ST., BROOKLINE, 617-734-1268, WWW.FUGAKYU.NET

UpStairs on the Square

LIKE A GIRLY GIRL'S dream bedroom, this elegant restaurant brings out the inner princess in everyone—even macho men. Nestled in a Harvard Square landmark building, it's divided into two floors and multiple dining areas, each with its own aesthetic. At the magenta-colored Monday Club Bar on the first floor, you can sip signature pink drinks, including Boston's only cosmo that isn't sickly sweet. The Zebra Room, named for its rug, has boldly colored walls that radiate warmth. Upstairs, the Soirée Dining Room is more elegant with pastel pink walls, gold accents and two fireplaces. Nestled in back behind a set of French doors is the Jewel Box Bar. The menu varies, with the first floor's courses being slightly less expensive and casual than what's served upstairs. The herbed goat cheese ravioli is a popular choice below, while upstairs our favorites include the seared giant Nantucket sea scallops and the caramelized Berkshire pork chop. Come for a drink, dinner or one of their many special events, such as afternoon tea, Red Sox parties and book signings. One of the few places that keeps Harvard Square colorful, it's an absolute gem. 91 Winthrop St., Cambridge, 617-864-1933, WWW.UPSTAIRSONTHESQUARE.COM

Olives

"HUMBLE" ISN'T THE right word to describe Todd English's presence in the culinary marketplace. Of late, the world-renowned celebrity chef presides over restaurants in more than 10 cities, stars in his own TV show and stamps his name on a particularly stunning mortar and pestle set (crafted from olive wood, of course). But Olives hails as his original claim to fame—and still frequently commands a full house of captive palates. Left in the capable hands of executive chef Joe Brenner, many of English's rustic yet lavishly accented Mediterranean dishes—which can be enjoyed overlooking quaint City Square from the cluster of tables, or while seated at the glossy bar (where you should absolutely order the peach bellini)—take their flavors from the open kitchen's brick oven and wood-fired grill. A word of advice, though: Even when overbooking your stomach with those last three bites of horseradish whipped potatoes seems completely necessary, don't squelch your opportunity to order the best falling chocolate cake this city has to offer. 10 City Square, Charlestown, 617-242-1999, WWW.TODDENGLISH.COM

Dbar

A LITTLE SECRET that only a select few know: You don't have to leave Dorchester for a stellar night on the town. Start the evening off with a delicious dinner at Dbar, served daily from 5 to 10 pm. The moderately priced entrées range from $16 to $19 and include choices like lime-scented grilled mahi-mahi and bourbon-dijon pork tenderloin. After you've digested dinner and downed a couple of drinks, stick around for Dbar's transformation from restaurant to nightclub. From 10 pm to 2 am on Fridays and Saturdays, DJs keep the party pumpin'. In fact, you may even want to return on Sunday morning to check out Dbar's Hangover Brunch. Regulars praise the "drunk and naked" lobster omelet and brioche French toast. Weeknight entertainment includes Show Tune Tuesdays, which begin at 9 pm and focus on award-winning musicals like Little Shop of Horrors and Grease. That "D" stands for "Don't go all the way downtown for dinner and a good time." 1236 Dorchester Ave., Dorchester, 617-265-4490, WWW.DBARBOSTON.COM

GUARANTEED GREAT MEAL: North End

La Brace

OPEN SINCE LAST SUMMER, this North End eatery stands apart from the red-sauce and checkered-tablecloth competition. Priding itself on its grilled food (in fact, the name means "red-hot coals" in Italian), La Brace prepares entrées simply, with basic seasonings and clean flavors. You won't find the artery-clogging alfredo sauces of many Italian-American restaurants; instead, the chefs prepare everything so that the true flavor of the grill comes through. Our favorites include the grilled salmon served with roasted potatoes and escarole in a roasted pepper vinaigrette, the grilled beef tenderloin served with mashed potatoes and mushroom trifolati, and the house special, eggplant parmesan. The dining room is also bigger than those of many North End competitors, meaning that while other people wait on an interminable line, you'll be chomping away. 76 Salem St., Boston, 617-523-8820, WWW.LABRACEBOSTON.COM

OPEN FOR BRUNCH, dinner and late-night munchies, this upscale bistro specializes in feel-good American food. If dishes like mac 'n' cheese with garlic sausage and breadcrumbs, braised short ribs, and fish and chips set your stomach growling, this is your joint. Meanwhile, the late-night menu has snacks to stave off the hunger pangs till breakfast: A cheese plate, onion rings, artichoke dip or even almonds should do the trick. Candlelit tables and TVs broadcasting Sox games make this a spot for a romantic date or boys' night out. There's even live entertainment Thursday and Sunday and space for private parties. Café Porto Bello

OK, SO SOUTHIE probably isn't the first place that comes to mind when considering Italian food in the Hub. But if you look past the brownstones and can decipher the thick Irish accents, you'll find a gem in Café Porto Bello. The menu features Italian staples such as chicken marsala, veal parmesan and tortellini alfredo. And, of course, their pizza is still every bit as good as we remember from last year. A slice from Café Porto Bello will make anyone forget they're in South Boston—at least until the accent filters in through the windows. 672 East Broadway, Boston, 617-269-7680, WWW.CAFEPORTOBELLOONLINE.COM

GUARANTEED GREAT MEAL: South End

Stella

THESE DAYS the South End is jam-packed with globe-spanning eateries, but this gastronomic influx has hardly shaken chef/owner Evan Deluty from his starry perch at the corner of Washington and West Brookline. Something about it—the casually intimate marble bar, the awning-covered al fresco seating, the under-$30 entrées—keeps this smartly dressed, modish Italian boîte brimming with clients seven nights a week. Our guess? It's the food. Cracker-crisp pizzas—one detailed with a trio of earthy mushrooms and a potent drizzle of truffle oil, another with prosciutto and gorgonzola cream—carpet the clean, white plates at many tables, while in a wide bowl fresh linguine tangles itself around al dente asparagus tips and a poached egg. Truth be told, these modern takes on regional Italian classics would leave your stomach a little less laden were it not imperative to finish out the night with the house tiramisu. 1525 Washington St., Boston, 617-247-7747, WWW.BOSTONSTELLA.COM

BARBECUE
Village Smokehouse

BROOKLINE VILLAGE has very little in common with the Lone Star State, except for one particular fire pit at the corner of Harvard and Washington streets. Twenty years ago, this exposed-brick and checkered-tablecloth outpost infiltrated the Bohemian town with baby backs, barbecued brisket and piles of pulled pork, and the locals have never looked back. Portion sizes are unmistakably Texan; hungry jacks can be seen through the picture windows, taking stabs at a whopping platter of one giant beef rib, beef brisket, barbecued chicken, Texas sausage and baby back ribs called the Texas Hawg. Meanwhile, the borderline-kitschy drink roster—how's about a High Noon Martini or a Jesse James 'rita?—just about draws the "yee-haw" from your lips. The best of the West really has found its way back East. 1 HARVARD ST., BROOKLINE, 617-566-3782, WWW.VILLAGESMOKEHOUSE.COM

HIDDEN GEM
O Ya

THIS FOODIE PARADISE tucked away in the Leather District in an old fire station isn't easy to find. They only take reservations for six or more, the dining room seats only 40 people, and the prices are high. But don't let any of that deter you. Here's the thing: Owners Tim and Nancy Cushman are geniuses at what they do, with Tim serving as chef and Nancy as the sake expert. Their take on Japanese cuisine showcases some serious sushi artistry as well as creative cooked dishes (meat gets just as much attention as fish on O Ya's menu). Favorites include the fried Kumamoto oyster nigiri and the Santa Barbara spot prawns. Diners also plotz over the sea urchin and the chicken yakitori. You'll want to keep ordering small plates all night; don't, or you won't be able to afford to come back, and you won't have room for one of their fabulous desserts. 9 East St., Boston, 617-654-9900

ICE CREAM
JP Licks

MAYBE THE BEST feature of independent creameries—other than farm-fresh milk and hand-dipped cones—is their tendency to whip up quirky, idiosyncratic flavors that make you cock your head to the side in momentary confusion... and then get you thinking (and craving) outside that carton of Breyers Neapolitan. Case in point: JP Licks, where the roster of more than 20 stock flavors gets ramped up each month with local darlings and seasonal treats. Fresh Lumpy Primate (last month's feature—banana ice cream studded with oversized chocolate chips and walnut pieces). Wild Turkey Bourbon (for Thanksgiving). Cherry Ortiz (née Garciaparra). Even a custard-like concoction of brown sugar, nutmeg, cinnamon and bits of egg noodle ribbons—JP's rendition of traditional noodle kugel—guaranteed to make any Jewish grandmother lick her lips and ask for a double-scoop. 659 Centre St., Jamaica Plain, 617-524-6740; additional locations in Boston, Brookline, Newton and Somerville; WWW.JPLICKS.COM

INDIAN Kashmir

CHICKEN TIKKA MASALA and saag paneer no longer turn heads—in fact, the former has been crowned the national dish of Britain—but they still pay the bills at most Indian restaurants. Not satisfied with just keeping the buck rolling, however, the group behind Kashmir (and the five other members of Boston's upscale Indian cuisine enterprise) see to it that dining at their Newbury Street storefront feels just as regal as supping at the Taj (the one in India, not the one on Arlington Street). Here, in fact, heads do turn—and not just to watch the beautiful people who stroll along this baby Rodeo Drive. Whether you've settled into the dining room's majestic landscape—ornately carved chairs, lavishly upholstered banquettes and linen napkins that sprout from water goblets like origami tulips—or under one of the patio's daintily fringed umbrellas, you'll be dazzled not only by your surroundings, but also by the fluffy biryanis, delicate dosas and succulent tandoori roasts. Oh, and how could we forget? A few tugs on the patio's fruity hookah pipe would cap off any meal with a hit. 279 Newbury St., Boston, 617-536-1695, WWW.KASHMIRRESTAURANT.COM

ITALIAN
Sorellina

YOU'D BEST come hungry. Everything—and we do mean everything—is absolutely superb at chef Jamie Mammano's sister restaurant to the enduringly fabulous Mistral. Regional Italian with a contemporary twist results in scrumptious seasonal menus boasting delicacies like ravioli with spring beets, toasted almond butter and aged balsamic vinegar, and grilled octopus with black pearl couscous and Meyer lemon. The 15-oz. Angus rib-eye is one of the best we've tasted, and reservations are a good idea due to their popularity, but rather than being harried or haughty, the staff are as hospitable as they come. Add to that the fact that it's one of the sexiest dining rooms in Boston—with sleek furnishings, a mural dominating the back wall and floor-to-ceiling windows offering gorgeous views of Copley Square—and it's obvious why this place is so sizzling hot. 1 Huntington Ave., Boston, 617-412-4600, WWW.SORELLINABOSTON.COM

LATE-NIGHT FOOD
Franklin Café

GOOD THING THE Franklin Café keeps the food and drinks flowing well into the wee hours (1:30 am is pretty good by Boston's standards); the line of South Enders—and wannabe South Enders—at this dark mahogany Shawmut Ave. staple can be long. No surprise, though. Never mind the flawlessly executed steak frites and its bed of port demi-glace-glazed, crispy shoestring fries. Or the smoky skillet of roasted mussels served with drum butter. It doesn't even matter that the flagship Boston branch doesn't offer dessert. The house butter—a ramekin of creamy, garlicky hummus—provides reason enough to linger over the rustic boule and your Boston Bog well after the T shuts down. 278 Shawmut Ave., Boston, 617-350-0010, WWW.FRANKLINCAFE.COM

LOCAL/ORGANIC
Henrietta's Table

LOCATED IN THE Charles Hotel, this country-style restaurant is like a rural escape from the bustle of Harvard Square. With large wooden tables and chairs, fresh flowers and a homespun atmosphere, it's the perfect setting for some down-home country cookin', but the bill of fare is much more sophisticated than at your average farm. Whether you eat in the dining room or outside on the garden-like patio, it's consistently bone-sticking, finger-lickin' good. The dinner menu includes all-American favorites like Yankee pot roast and Niman Ranch grilled smoked pork chop, with entrées starting at $14. The chefs are adamant about using only organic ingredients and seasonal, locally grown fruits and vegetables. If you're interested in learning more about the local farms and farmers, you're in luck. Henrietta's Table developed trading cards that are offered along with the check and showcase info about the food and the people who grow it. If you buy all 10 cards at the farmers' market, all the proceeds will go to the Farm School, a local children's teaching farm and supplier. PREPARED FOODS
Savenor's Market

Purveyors to more than 40 of Boston's top restaurants (including many Boston's Best awardees), Savenor's is a perennial winner in this category, probably because of their dedication to supplying only the very finest. The meat department stocks everything from filet mignon and bison to lion and alligator steaks, while the fruits and vegetables are so fresh you'll feel like you picked them yourself. Besides the peerless products, their customer service is flawless. Don't carry cash? Open a house account. Unable to make it to the market? They've got that covered, with delivery service to most of Boston's neighborhoods. but low enough that you can converse with that cutie you just met at the bar. The unique dinner menu is divided into temperature categories: raw, cool, hot and brick oven. Raw options include seafood, like half chilled lobster and seaweed salad. The cool portion is mainly salads and chilled appetizers, including the popular baby pea tendril salad with goat cheese and marcona almonds. On the hot side are entrées like a grilled strip steak with roasted potatoes, baby spinach and a red wine glaze, while the brick oven creates their signature pizzas, our favorite topped with caramelized onion, Asiago and pesto. But eating is only part of the point, as the drink list is even more impressive. Having served more than 18,000 of their signature frozen bellinis, it wins the popularity contest hands down. A cool place to chill or a hot spot for a hot date, it's the hip hideout for the sophisticated set. 1 Appleton St., Boston, 617-728-0728, WWW.28DEGREES-BOSTON.COM

MARGARITA
Cactus Club

BEANTOWN IS VERY much a beer town, and the locals have always been quick to raise their pint glasses to local brews Sam Adams and Harpoon. Those summer nights, though, bring with them a seemingly endless stream of the frosty, salt-speckled, Cuervo Gold–spiked cocktails so popular at Boylston Street's Cancun outpost. Die-hard Cactus Clubbers even have the option of mixing it up on Tequila Tuesdays, when this raucous, sporty scene turns its attention to a veritable salad bar of margarita mixers. Pick your poison: Triple sec can quickly become Cointreau or Grand Marnier, and those in the mood for a little eye-candy can opt to mix one of the 40-plus agave nectars with a cerulean shot of Curaçao. Tip: The wilder the brew the better. If your concoction draws enough drooling gazes from around the room, it could be featured as the "My-Garita of the Month." 939 Boylston St., Boston, 617-236-0200, WWW.BESTMARGARITAS.COM

MEDITERRANEAN
Oleana

LAST WE CHECKED, Mediterranean waters not only span the coast of Western Europe, but also lap the shores of Eastern Europe and Middle Eastern territories such as Turkey and Northern Africa. That may be, but since most so-called Mediterranean restaurants barely stray beyond eggplant parm and spanikopita, we think Oleana chef/owner Ana Sortun deserves a lot of credit for introducing Boston to the lesser-known half of this oft-touted region. Even when it's too cold to dine in Hampshire Street's enchanted garden, we wouldn't pass up the opportunity to savor a tour through this award-winning chef's extensive spice cabinet, the likes of which pepper each example of her handiwork: the spinach, red beet and yogurt falafel, Egyptian-spiced carrot purée punched up with nuts and olive oil, wine-sauced ricotta dumplings and her signature flattened lemon chicken atop Turkish cheese pancake. Nor have we come across any frequenters of this Inman Square hot spot who didn't make a beeline to Barnes & Noble when her cookbook, Spice: Flavors of the Eastern Mediterranean, hit shelves last year. It's hard enough to get a reservation; the least we can do is read up on the recipes. 134 Hampshire St., Cambridge, 617-661-0505, WWW.OLEANARESTAURANT.COM

MEXICAN
Tu y Yo Mexican Fonda

PRICKLY-PEAR CACTUS does not show up on many Boston-area menus. Nor do fried grasshoppers. Or black beans worth eating. But the last thing this college town needs is another Velveeta-drenched basket of Tostitos or keg of margarita mix. Far from either of those, this Slow Food venture is as much a tribute to authentic, home-style Mexican cuisine as it is to chef/owner Epigmenio Guzmán's family tree. (Many items credit the original chef.) That said, first-timers should bring their game faces. Though the nopales con longaniza faintly resemble chopped green bell peppers in bolognese-type gravy, "Mom's" mouth-puckering concoction of spiced sausage, cactus stems and amaranth seeds has seen no play on typical cantina menus. Nor should you be fooled by the abused term "jalapeño poppers" (these are the hottest peppers you'll ever pop) or the seemingly bland spinach a la Carlos (garlicky spinach and potatoes); both dishes really cross the border. 858 Broadway, Somerville, 617-623-5411, WWW.TUYYOMEXICANFONDA.COM

MIDDLE EASTERN
Byblos

NAMED AFTER THE ancient Phoenician city on the coast of what's now Lebanon, this restaurant serves the most authentic Middle Eastern cuisine in the area. Located in Norwood, it's a bit of a drive from Boston but worth the trip. Homemade pies are favorites, including the sfiha, a mix of ground meat, onions, tomatoes, pine nuts and spices. Also popular are the mezzah combinations and family platters. Grilled options include a variety of kabobs—kafta, shish, chicken and lamb. The pastries and desserts feature their signature cream cheese, and strong Lebanese coffee completes the gargantuan meal. The experience, however, isn't complete until you've seen the belly dancers (call ahead for a performance schedule). 678 Washington St., Norwood, 781-762-8998, WWW.BYBLOSRESTAURANT.COM the meal wishing you'd ordered another. The solution to indecision? Match, where you can mix and (you guessed it) match as many of their seven miniburgers as you can stomach with at least as many takes on Grey Goose cocktails. (Post-dinner snackers might be sated with two or three burgers, while meal-seekers will likely need four or five to settle the rumbles.) But, wait—a burger joint? Have we forgotten where we are? Clio's just across the street… Ah, but don't be fooled. They're not exactly slapping frozen patties between Wonder Bread at this amber-hued hot-to-trot nightspot. Purists still have their classic cheeseburger, but thrill-seeking palates can spring for spicy lamb, New England lobster or fried-mozzarella take on a veggie burger—all of which come neatly packaged between brioche-like bun caps. NACHOS

Sunset Grill & Tap

LET'S TALK NACHOS for a sec. For a dish that falls in with burgers and barbecued riblets as staple bar grub, there's an awful lot of variation—and most of it not worth their chips. Showers of not-quite-melted cheddar and puddles of refried beans, plus globs of greasy chili. Come on, right? This may be a bar and you may be tipsy, but there's no reason to feed your beer munchies with anything less tasty than what this Allston landmark serves up. Be sure to bring an appetite (or some ravenous buddies), because this whopping batch of warm, crispy chips comes piled high with chunky guacamole, black olives, sliced jalapeños, salsa, shredded iceberg, scallions, cool sour cream, beans, meat (if you want)… and probably a partridge in a pear tree, if you ask nicely. 130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331, WWW.ALLSTONSFINEST.COM

NATURAL FOOD STORE
Whole Foods Market

HARD TO BELIEVE that a decade or so ago "organic" was about as ridiculous an idea as a speedy commute on the Green Line. Times have changed. Thanks to John Mackey's decision to drop out of college and throw every penny he had at a then-unfounded idea—an all-natural food store—West Coast transplants and other natural-food followers can heave an organic sigh of relief. No matter what area you call home, it's unlikely that your options for granola bars, chocolate bars or salad bars include anything less than those stamped "all natural" or "certified organic." Even better, most Whole Foods Markets reinforce the idea (and the option) of supporting area farmers; depending on what's locally in season, your grocery bags can contain anything from hand-stretched Vermont mozzarella, to gourmet pasta sauces stirred up in Somerville, to those super-sweet, tiny Maine blueberries. Word to the wise: If you can bear the weekend crowds, the range of free samples could be a meal in itself. 15 Westland Ave., Boston, 617-375-1010; additional locations in Boston, Brighton, Cambridge and Newton; WWW.WHOLEFOODS.COM

KO Prime's chef de cuisine, Jamie Bissonette, dishes out both choice steaks and top-notch seafood

KO Prime

SURE, KEN ORINGER loves steak; he'd just prefer to eat it in surroundings that don't scream "old boys club." And while he's at it, he'd like some nice fish options for his wife. And side dishes a little more creative than a baked potato. Enter KO Prime, Oringer's latest venture, in the space previously occupied by Spire at the Hotel Nine Zero. Although only a few months old, it's already earned meat-eating converts—and a name for itself (clearly, if it's getting two of our awards). The ambiance is contemporary, all warm earth tones like chocolate browns and rich reds, with cow-skin rugs and murals of "American Gothic" inset into the ceiling adding a playful touch. Billing itself as a modern steakhouse, the unique menu includes Wagyu and Kobe beef, as well as a raw bar section. Fabulous seafood entrées round out the bill of fare, but the spotlight is definitely on the steaks. A popular cut is the rib eye, a 30-oz. bone-in chop served with palm soufflé (light, airy puffed potatoes). The extensive wine list has something to complement every dish, along with stylish cocktails. All in all, KO's an especially welcome addition for Boston's carnivorous crowd. 90 Tremont St., Boston, 617-772-0202, WWW.KOPRIMEBOSTON.COM

OUTDOOR DINING
Casa Romero

DESPITE THE UNPREDICTABILITY of New England weather, one thing's for sure—if it's nice, every seat in the outdoor patio at Casa Romero will be taken. As soon as the sun starts shining in May, the intimate garden space opens, and it remains the most romantic part of the restaurant's seating well into October. With room for 27 people, it's cozy yet comfortable, the perfect spot for a great date or a night out with friends. With greenery all around you and the stars overhead, it's like a little slice of Eden tucked away in the Back Bay. Add to that the fact that after all these years, their Mexican food is still delicious, and you'll understand why it's our top choice for eating al fresco. 30 Gloucester St., Boston, 617-536-4341, WWW.CASAROMERO.COM

PEOPLE WATCHING
29 Newbury

THE PARADE OF HUMAN poodles that is Newbury Street on a nice day begins on the first block, between Arlington and Berkeley, and the café at this perennially popular watering hole and American bistro offers front-row seating. From shopaholic suburban trophy wives to the Scary Hair People, the whole world ambles across your field of vision, and you can enjoy a delicious meal and cocktails while watching it. Invariably, there's a lot of air-kissing and gossip over the wrought-iron fence as friends see friends walking past. At one time, there were a few regulars who would even hold up numbers like Olympic judges to rate the fashions on passersby. Inside the cozy bar (where we've been drinking for longer than we want to admit) is a microcosm of Boston, encompassing everyone from Brahmin Beacon Hill matrons to multiple-pierced and heavily tattooed club kids. It's truly where worlds collide, making it the most fun place in town to watch the human pageant. 29 Newbury St., Boston, 617-536-0290, WWW.29NEWBURY.COM

PRE-THEATER DINING
Pigalle

What show? That's what you'll ask yourself when you sit down to dinner at Marc Orfaly's Pigalle. Located on Charles Street, this charming contemporary restaurant serves only the most authentic and desirable French cuisine. From the hostesses who take your jacket and décor that mirrors that of similar places on the Continent—neutrals and browns as the primary color scheme—it's got the sophistication of France without all the snobbery. The concise menu reflects the restaurant's minimal seating; however, food is so exquisitely prepared that you're sure to find something to tickle your fancy. Popular meals include the crispy half duck with potato purée, and the pan-roasted salmon with harissa steamed rice. The relaxing atmosphere and delicious food are tempting: Be careful that you don't stay too long and miss your show. Before you leave, however, make sure to save room for dessert. The pistachio crème brûlée with candied pistachios is an all-time favorite. Open until 10:30 pm on weekends, Pigalle can also serve as an after-show-spot for a snack or drinks. Quietly serving up impeccable food, it's one of Boston's undervalued local gems. 75 CHARLES ST. SOUTH, BOSTON, 617-423-4944, WWW.PIGALLEBOSTON.COM ways and occasional one-hour waits for delivery at the flagship Beacon Hill and Coolidge Corner locations wouldn't even register a blip of waning business. In fact, Boston's addiction to these premium pies spun from top-shelf ingredients seems to grow with each new storefront, Newbury Street's crammed corridor being the latest in-city locale. But eclectic embellishments—feta, pesto, crisp bacon—and chunky crushed tomatoes are just the obvious perks. What we can't figure out is what makes the crust so addictive, setting the standard for all thin-crust pies with its oxymoronic crispy chew. Whenever Tobins is ready to share that secret, we're all ears—or mouths. 20 Charles St., Boston, 617-723-9600; additional locations in Boston, Lexington, Hingham and Brookline; WWW.THEUPPERCRUSTPIZZERIA.COM

PLACE TO GO WHEN PRICE IS NO OBJECT
Clio

IN THE MOOD to splurge? Whatever the reason, the place to do it is Clio, chef Ken Oringer's flagship restaurant. The list of entrées isn't overly long, and everything falls in the $28–$40 range; but if money isn't an issue, deliciousness will be the order of the day. Asian-inspired French-American is the best way to describe the cuisine, and the décor is salon-like—swanky yet comfortable. (Of course, adding to the décor are the well-dressed socialites who swarm there.) The food comes out of the kitchen looking like a work of art, almost too pretty to eat—almost. With appetizers like marinated yellowtail and yellow fin tuna and entrées that include a crunchy sautéed Atlantic halibut, every meal here is memorable, and the dessert menu is a sweets-lover's dream. If you're looking for a place to impress your in-laws or run up that expense account, you're sure to leave feeling fat and happy. 370 Comm. Ave., Boston, 617-536-7200, WWW.CLIORESTAURANT.COM

POWER BREAKFAST
Bristol Lounge at the Four Seasons

FORGET WHEATIES. To properly start your day, you need to feed your Armani-suited body with a little something from executive chef Brooke Vosika's kitchen and a multimillion-dollar Public Garden view from the Four Seasons' Bristol Lounge. Hyper-healthy diners can start the morning with an upmarket protein smoothie—you can bet this berry mélange didn't just fall out of a Minute Maid canister—or a crush of organic carrot-ginger pulp. But the selections get more decadent from there: Maine lobster hash with poached eggs, griddled crab cakes sauced with Old Bay hollandaise, or a carb-craver's platter of multigrain pancakes sweetened with walnuts and date jam. Still want to go to work? If you change your mind, the lunch menu looks equally tempting. 200 Boylston St., Boston, 617-351-2037, WWW.FOURSEASONS.COM

POWER LUNCH
Abe & Louie's

THE SMELL OF LEATHER combined with the irresistible aroma of grilled steak radiates from this lunching ground of the high and mighty. The décor is designed around the leather chairs and booths—a somewhat masculine complement to the hundreds of pounds of meat this restaurant cooks every day. But despite the powerhouse feel of the leather, meat and testosterone, the elegant chandeliers, flowers, and music make this man's man steakhouse a flawless choice for a date or romantic night out. The entrées are admittedly expensive, so be prepared for sticker shock. Specials rotate daily, and steak and seafood combinations are available at market price. A winning entrée is the aged prime New York sirloin: a hefty, one-pound center cut of thick beef. Abe & Louie's prides itself on aged meats, all of which sit for up to five weeks to maximize flavor and tenderness. As for side dishes, you can choose from a seemingly endless array, including various styles of potatoes, fries and asparagus. An exquisite wine list offers an enormous variety that ranges from moderately priced bottles for under $100 to bottles that cost well over $1,000. The place to bring the guy or gal to seal the deal. 793 Boylston St., Boston, 617-536-6300, WWW.ABEANDLOUIES.COM

PRE-/POST-FENWAY DINING Eastern Standard

LET'S FACE IT—the franks notwithstanding, the food at Fenway leaves something to be desired. Nine bucks for deep-fried chicken tenders? No, thanks. Some members of Red Sox Nation are smart enough to look elsewhere for sustenance, and they don't have to look far. One of the best restaurants in Boston (whether it's baseball season or there's four feet of snow on the ground) is right around the corner. So why settle for a lukewarm pretzel and over-salted peanuts during the fifth inning? Eastern Standard's menu covers more ground than Coco Crisp, being one of the few places where you can enjoy roasted bone marrow while your picky friend dines on a grilled cheese sandwich, both prepared to perfection. Perhaps more importantly, they do dessert in a big way, our favorites being the crème brûlée and a warm bread pudding that will make you forget whether the Sox won or lost. Add to that some of the best bistro décor in Boston, and it seems imperative to stop by Eastern Standard either before or after the game. *528 Comm. He's a huge supporter of Eva's Garden in South Dartmouth, traveling there to hand-pick many of his ingredients, and he insists on using locally grown produce whenever possible. One of the adventurous chef's favorite things to cook with is offal—the parts that many of us would opt to stay far, far away from: brains, tongues, hearts. And his passion for experimenting with funky ingredients is one reason why KO Prime rises above the standard steakhouse. NOT THAT YOUR HONEY wouldn't send your heart aflutter by downing a cheeseburger at Bartley's or sharing a pile of wings with you at Buff's, but we guarantee that one trip to this corner between Harvard and Union squares will leave you both starry-eyed… and raising your glasses for one more round of sangria. You probably won't be the only romancers there, but once you slip past the bead curtain and into your own private nook, take in the Old World ambiance—glowing candlelight, exposed brick and Iberian tiles, and the matte sheen of the hammered copper ceiling—and order some gambas al ajillo (garlic shrimp), queso rebozado con miel (fried Spanish cheese with honey and caramelized onions), or a paella built for two, you'll be too swept up in the moment to notice. SALADS
Stephanie's on Newbury

THIS MAY BE ONE of Newbury Street's most fashionable rendezvous for equally fashionable ladies to lunch leisurely in between credit card aerobics, but let it be known that at Stephanie's the dozen or so interpretations of salad aren't for the faint of appetite. Romaine and field greens merely cloak the wide-mouthed china, but the hearty trimmings—some classic, others fresh and inventive—shoot up from there. This being the New England coast (and a particularly posh piece of real estate), exceptional seafood picks like poached salmon fillet and Asian-inspired takes on sushi-grade tuna and grilled shrimp—not the little rock morsels, but the jumbo types—make regular plate appearances. Then there are carnivores' salads (meaty blends for those who tell themselves that anything topping a leafy green meets the "salad" criteria). For them, chef Corey Comeau throws in sliced beef tenderloin or grilled chicken. 190 Newbury St., Boston, 617-236-0990, WWW.STEPHANIESONNEWBURY.COM

SANDWICHES
All Star Sandwich Bar

CHRIS SCHLESINGER doesn't dig wraps. In fact, he doesn't even consider them a sandwich. He and All Star Sandwich Bar co-owner Jim Economides even posted stickers around their restaurant—"Wrap Free Since 2006"—just so there'd be no confusion. That said, the sandwiches the duo serve up are far from Kraft Singles and flapjacks of Oscar Mayer bologna.

All Star's menu revives old standards and legendary classics. Tuna melts may be the default of sub shops and quickie marts across the country, but whatever happens to albacore and mayo behind that spunky counter—the addition of cheddar cheese and sweet pickle relish can't hurt—pulls it into the ranks of beefier sandwiches, no pun intended: the Atomic Meatloaf Meltdown, eastern North Carolina–style pulled pork (Thursday's special, piled high on an average white bun), and Buffalo, N.Y.'s signature stack of thin-sliced beef au jus and sinus-clearing horseradish known as the Beef on Weck. Sandwiches aside, what's not to love about a place where you can help yourself to an Oreo on the way out? 1245 Cambridge St., Cambridge, 617-868-3065, WWW.ALLSTARSANDWICHBAR.COM

SEAFOOD
Legal Sea Foods

WITH FIVE LOCATIONS in Boston and Cambridge, and a national reputation to boot, other seafood restaurants aren't even in the running. We don't care about that clam shack on Route 6 you think has the best lobster roll, or what Todd, Lydia, Michael or Ming did to your halibut last week; Legal's still rules. Proof that being a chain needn't ruin a place, they've got the dim lighting and elegance of your favorite local haunt. An extensive menu means you'll find something you want whether you're a strict fishatarian or a meat-and-potatoes person. Their fresh chowder's been served in the White House longer than Jay Leno's been cracking stale presidential jokes, and the seafood casserole and the Alaskan king crab legs are unsung favorites. For crying out loud, even their corporate headquarters are the anchor building of the historic Fish Pier. Pops

WANT TO KNOW the secret to the steak frites at Pops? So do we, but chef/owner Felino Samson isn't giving up all the ingredients. Still, we have a clue: butter—and a healthy does of port and garlic. All for the delicious price of $20. Now served à la carte, round it out with the $4 garlic-thyme fries. If you want to mix it up, other enticing sides include spinach with garlic and sesame. As scrumptious as the rib eyes are the surroundings. Done up like a stylish salon with paisley wallpaper and marble floors, the small space gets packed (15 tables, 36 seats—although when weather allows there's more seating available on the patio). Need your red-meat fix but don't have a reservation? Ask for a stool at the bar, which looks into the kitchen. Perhaps then, you can figure out the rest of the recipe. RED MEAT AND RED wine are what it's all about at this carnivore's mecca. With award-winning head chef Jay Murray (a self-described "flavor theorist") in the kitchen, you can order with ease knowing that there's a method to his madness. Beef is flown in from an exclusive farm in California that breeds only the finest purebred steer. The Chef's Weekly Menu, a list of specialty entrées, showcases what Murray has been hard at work perfecting. In addition, an extensive à la carte menu allows you to mix and match your favorite cut of beef with various sides. Order a 32-oz. prime rib or a 14-oz. dry-aged New York, then add any sides you think you might still have room for. Popular ones include the truffled "Tater Tots" and the blue cheese mashed potatoes. The fun of creating your own meal, catered to your every desire, doesn't end there. With more than 1,000 selections of fine wine, there's something to put a smile on anyone's face. American options are intertwined with international ones and make for one of Boston's most comprehensive lists. CHARLES STREET in Beacon Hill is a pretty peaceful place early on a Saturday morning. That is, until you reach the patch of sidewalk between Chestnut and Walnut, where a line of hungry patrons—some students and tourists, but mostly locals—gather outside, awaiting a shot at the Paramount experience. That's because the unique, upscale cafeteria setup has patrons queue to order at the counter. But once you're inside, the menu will erase any in-line anxiety. Blueberry pancakes and Belgian waffles are always a favorite—add bacon or sausage to your pancakes or fresh fruit to your waffles for only $2—as are any of the eatery's nine daily omelet options. Looking for something simple? Try the two eggs and ham, served with home fries and toast or a breakfast sandwich (starting at just $2). SUBURBAN RESTAURANT
51 Lincoln

CHEF/OWNER JEFFREY Fournier creates not only the food on your plate, but also the art on the walls—and both are worth the trek out to Newton. His abstract paintings complement the subtle décor, and his creativity continues in his innovative and unusual combinations of ingredients. Food and alcohol pairings are a popular way to enjoy his originality. The lavender liquor with rosemary-skewered shrimp and lavender honey, and the limoncello with cured salmon and red onion tea sandwich are delicious examples. Entrées are moderately priced from $19 to $27, including cast-iron-seared sirloin steak; day-cured, pan-seared salmon; and pommery-mustard free-range organic chicken. The atmosphere is homey without being hokey, and the restaurant is constantly packed with locals as well as city-dwellers willing to venture out of Boston's food scene to sample something unusual. (One 30-something couple we know eats there on a weekly basis.) Whether you're a finger-painting foodie or a palate-challenged Picasso, 51 Lincoln is artistry in its purest form. 51 Lincoln St., Newton Highlands, 617-965-3100, WWW.51LINCOLNNEWTON.COM

SUSHI
Douzo

ATTENTION, SUSHI LOVERS! This sleek eatery serves the best raw fish in Boston, and in a room that's as sexy as restaurants come. Conveniently located next to the Back Bay train station, they offer lunch (hallelujah!) and dinner, in addition to doing a brisk takeout and delivery business. Douzo is Japanese for "Please come in," and it's aptly named. Reservations are recommended for dinner, as this hot spot is constantly packed, especially on weekends. The modern, Asian-inspired décor and lounge-like atmosphere are conducive to a date or a night out with friends. Popular selections include the Phoenix Roll, a combination of a crab stick in a spicy mayo wrap, topped with seared salmon with tobiko, and the Toro Torch Roll, an exquisite mix of onions and asparagus, topped with torched toro and jalapeño. Anyone with a taste for spicy things should try the three-alarm Jalapeño Roll. Sushi/Sashimi combination plates are also available in seemingly endless varieties, and because presentation is crucial in Japanese cuisine, everything is served in a unique, artistic fashion. The wonderfully fresh, savory taste of the fish will appeal to all your senses, and the hip bar scene takes the sting out of waiting for a table. 131 Dartmouth St., Boston, 617-859-8886, WWW.DOUZOSUSHI.COM

Toro

SOMETHING HAPPENED to corn on the cob when Toro opened. Something that plucked it from its humble ranks as the good old standby at all-American barbecues and New England lobster bakes, and threw it into some ethereal stratosphere of Ken Oringer's considerable genius. At Oringer's house—yes, there are five of them now; we're talking about the chic, gritty one with exposed brick and a namesake bull hung over the fireplace—knobs of the maize asado come gently charred, then rolled in garlicky aioli, a squirt of lime juice, espelette pepper and crumbles of creamy cotija cheese. Order two. You won't want to share—even if this is a tapas joint. This being a tapas joint, though, there are dozens of other plates to try—gambas al ajillo (griddled garlic shrimp), croquetas de bacalao (salt cod fritters), and hamburguesas de kobe (miniburgers amped up with smoked tomato and pickled red onions) are good bets. And the beauty of tapas joints, of course, is that the food can keep on coming as long as your stomach can hold out. ¡A comer! 1704 Washington St., Boston, 617-536-4300

Wagamama strongly encourages noodling around

THAI
House of Siam

UNLIKE MOST URBAN Thai tables worth their fish sauce, House of Siam doesn't sport that iconic divey façade. Ordinarily, that would leave us skeptical; ever notice how the lines at the pretty places aren't nearly as long? What most spit-'n'-polish noodle posts seem to lack in cushy chairs and linen napkins, they tend to make up for with glistening, glazy stir fries and fragrant curries. Call Bostonians lucky then, because this Columbus Ave. gem packs all the flavor of a proverbial diamond in the rough, but kicks it up a notch with the pizzazz that's native to this neighborhood—though on a more exotic scale. No Formica tabletops here; instead, your sweet and salty pad see ew and chili-basil-punctuated jumbo shrimp grace lantern-lit tables surrounded by bronze statuettes and Merlot-blushed walls. Granted, all this visual zest comes at a relative premium—many entrées do exceed the $10 mark—but it's still a good bargain for the area and certainly a place worth noodling around in. 542 Columbus Ave., Boston, 617-267-1755

VEGETARIAN
Grasshopper

SEITAN: IT'S WHAT'S for dinner. Nah, it doesn't have quite the oomph-factor of the original, does it? But nobody who's sunk a fork—correction: chopsticks—into any of these Asian-inspired tofu, vegetable or would-be-meat dishes can complain about walking away hungry. Liberal handfuls of broad, fresh rice ribbons wok-fried with bias-cut Chinese broccoli and tofu wedges would easily stand solo as a meal—maybe even enough for two—but most of the college-age, crunchy clientele in this divey Union Square herbivorium opt to supplement their noodle fixes with Chinese take-out staples. "Shrimp" with black bean sauce and "beef" with Chinese broccoli—the quotation marks are there to humor apprehensive carnivores—make frequent runs along the crowded rows of tables, but for a really well-rounded meal, be sure to treat yourself to a wedge of berry-topped vegan cheesecake. 1 North Beacon St., Allston, 617-254-8883, WWW.GRASSHOPPERVEGAN.COM

WELCOME ADDITION
Wagamama

BOSTONIANS WHO SPEND time in London are rejoicing at the opening of this U.K.-based noodle restaurant, and the fact that we're the first U.S. city to get one is one more thing for us to brag about. Remember those college days when a 50-cent package of ramen noodles wasn't just what you could afford, but what you craved? Wagamama has taken it to a whole new level. Chili chicken ramen remains one of the most popular entrées, but there's also salmon and the signature Wagamama seafood ramen to satisfy that Asian soul-food craving. Then there are the kare noodles, served in a coconut broth, and teppan noodles, cooked on a griddle, to expand your horizons. Everything's affordable, and the vegetarian options are almost limitless. Don't be dissuaded by the communal seating or the cultishly enthusiastic waitstaff; one taste, and you'll understand why this place has succeeded everywhere from ultrachic department stores to the most working-class neighborhood. Quincy Market Building, Faneuil Hall Marketplace, Boston, 617-742-9242, WWW.WAGAMAMA.COM

With over 100 wine selections and specials that vary daily, the Butcher Shop is the convenient equivalent of all those Old World holes-in-the-wall where the butcher proudly showcases his wares alongside a local wine that tastes like it was custom-crafted to go with it. WINE AND CHEESE SHOP

The Wine & Cheese Cask

IT'S SAID THAT there's a perfect wine for every food, mood and occasion (though it doesn't work in reverse; or else how would you explain Lancers?). One place that convinces us it's true is the Wine & Cheese Cask. Their laid-back, European approach to wine is a contrast to the preciousness and snobbery of many others. Although they carry an admirable selection of bottles from France, Italy, Portugal and Spain, instead of pushing what's hot or expensive, their staff will help you find something to please all palates in a range of prices—whether it's a 2005 Burgundy or a basic, $9 wine from Spain. The Cask also puts out a monthly news-

BAGELS

Katz Bagels

IT'S SUNDAY MORNING. You're bleary-eyed. Coffee hasn't kicked in yet. But all you can think about is getting over to Chelsea for your half dozen before they sell out (and they will—early). Not only will the old man behind the counter tell you that they're the best bagels in the world—maybe he's a little biased; he's been making them since 6 am-but the guy in line behind you, who gets a regular's wave and a good bit of repartee from the counter staff, concurs. Unlike most bagel/squagel/reduced-fat honey-walnut cream cheese purveyors these days, this bare-bones storefront hasn't jumped on the café bandwagon (though rumor has it they're giving sandwiches a go). Garlic (which combines garlic and sesame seeds), egg, marble and about seven other flavors pretty much account for the whole menu, though their bagel dogs and black-and-white cookies—whoopie pie halves, actually—are not to be missed. 139 PARK ST., CHELSEA, 617-884-9738

TRIP TO PARIS FOR UNDER $100

Petit Robert Bistro

SITTING PRETTY in Kenmore Square usually means you've scored Monster seats, but ever since chef Jacky Robert decided to pay a little homage to his hometown by setting up shop on Comm. Ave. (and more recently on Columbus Ave. in the South End), local Francophiles have been just as quick to snag petite bistro tables and pretend the Arc de Triomphe sits just beyond the lights at Fenway. Sweets-seekers might find it hard not to skip right to pastry chef Kristen Lawson's list of fine French treats—warm apple tarte tatin, dainty French macaroons and, of course, the web-like chocolate likeness of the Eiffel Tower—but no meal would be complete without rib-sticking French classics like rabbit stew over buttered noodles, tender calf's liver caramelized with onion and crisp bacon, or the ultimate tribute to Parisian bistros: steak frites. 468 COMM. WINGS

Buff's Pub

TO NEW ENGLANDERS, the thought of ordering cream-based clam chowder anywhere south of the Connecticut border evokes the same sense of pity and absurdity Buffalo natives must feel when they hear about "great wings" being served anywhere other than their beloved Anchor Bar. Fair enough. But without knowing exactly how close Buff's Pub gets to the original recipe, it's safe to say this boisterous Newton Corner watering hole takes its wings pretty seriously. Classic Buffalo, BBQ, honey BBQ, teriyaki and house signature Honey Hots make up the majority of this archetypal tavern menu; in fact, nary a booth or bar seat can be seen without a basket or two, a plastic ramekin of cool blue cheese dressing, crisp celery hearts… and a generous pile of paper napkins for mopping up what you don't lick off your fingers. 317 Washington St., Newton, 617-332-9134

GUARANTEED GREAT MEAL: Jamaica Plain

Ten Tables

IF THE POINT of dining out at neighborhood bistros is to feel cozy and comfortable—in other words, to feel as if you were at home—then Centre Street serves up one petite spot in particular that hovers somewhere between a classy, independent café and your eat-in kitchen. Actually, scratch that. The point (and the best part) is that this is Krista Kranyak's kitchen. Rather than rifling through their own fridges for what to cook, JPers regularly slip down to this elegant nook—it's probably no larger than your own dining room—to watch as chef David Punch and his crew throw a little French technique at whatever looked good in the market that day. Rest assured, Kranyak's small menu of organic produce and proteins and hand-crafted pastas rivals that of any downtown joint with more than a dime's worth of tables, but you don't have to venture beyond the Jamaica Way to enjoy it. 597 CENTRE ST., JAMAICA PLAIN, 617-524-8810, WWW.TENTABLES.NET

Bars & CLUBS

AFTERWORK DRINKS
Rattlesnake

IT'S A GOOD THING that amid all its historic architecture and upper-class exclusivity, the Back Bay has the Rattlesnake to loosen its collar and add a touch of raucousness to the neighborhood. With its breezy roof deck—a rarity in Boston—and an affordably priced pan–Latin American menu (try the pollo and tomato quesadilla), the 'snake will melt your cubicle woes away at quitting time and possibly even draw you back again for some late-night revelry. No fewer than 13 different tequilas can be mixed with their fresh-squeezed fruit juices ("none of that canned crap" here, scoffs Gordon Wilcox, one of the owners). This summer, the second floor has been transformed into the Venom Lounge, a more "urban contemporary" venue that pushes the chic meter up a notch. For 17 years, the Rattlesnake has drawn a blend of the downtown worker bees and office drones who tend toward the sexy and smart. Like the place itself, they're also refreshingly unpretentious and (thank the lord) a little bit rakish. 382 Boylston St., Boston, 617-859-7772, WWW.RATTLESNAKEBAR.COM

Place to Bring a Friend From New York
THE FOUNDATION LOUNGE

WHAT DID BOSTON do before it had Zensai (small-plate dishes from Japan), served on a year-round outdoor patio, while the tunes of a band called Soulicious set the mood? We can't remember—we've suppressed the painful memory. A 30-something, sophisticated crowd comes to the Foundation Tuesday through Sunday nights for a range of musical acts and the kind of cool, modern interior that's all too rare in this town. Close to Fenway, the Foundation Lounge even relaxes their business casual dress code when the Sox are at home, but while your New York pals are welcome to visit, you'd better remind them to keep a tight lid on any Yankees lids they might be tempted to wear. We're not above pointing out that the pinstriped boys from the Bronx suck, even in a setting as elegant and upscale as this. 500 COMM. AVE., BOSTON, 617-859-9900, WWW.THEFOUNDATIONLOUNGE.COM

The Beacon Hill Pub

SORRY, BEACON HILL PUB—we've had to suspend your eligibility in the "Dive Bar" category on account of your habitually exceeding the nightly quota of cable-

Whenever we're especially irritated by that new guy in our department—the one who takes credit for our ideas and always has to one-up us in front of the boss—we like to take him down to Charles Street at quitting time for a whupping on Pop a Shot, that one-on-one basketball game in the back, and of course old favorites like foosball and video pinball. BEER BAR
Sunset Grill & Tap

YOUR MOTHER ALWAYS said you should try different things. She probably wasn't talking about beer, but heck, her advice is conveniently relevant to the Sunset Grill & Tap. Their mission is to serve every different "style" of beer known to man—from double IPAs to fruit beers to lagers—and ideally the best offerings in each of those styles. Despite the claim printed on the menu that there's "no crap on tap," one manager conceded that they "even have Coors Light," so that no one can question their commitment to remaining encyclopedic. The staff is endearingly serious about beer, and the décor is a dizzying array of bottles, cans, posters, ads and promos. With their comprehensive (and sometimes exclusive) selection, well-indexed and up-to-date listings, and educational info on the menu, it's a veritable beer institute. In short, it's Homer Simpson's idea of heaven. 130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331, WWW.ALLSTONSFINEST.COM

CHEAP BEER
Sidebar

WHAT DO SUFFOLK law students, well-heeled guests of the Omni Parker House, construction workers and elderly retired couples have in common? They all love a $7 pitcher of Coors Light at Sidebar, of course. Open Monday through Friday, this Downtown Crossing hole-in-the-wall exists exclusively to make cheap-beer enthusiasts happy, and they don't close their doors until the last one's gotten his or her fill (usually around 11 pm). If draft beer isn't your thing, there's also a "Bottled Beer of the Month" for $1.50 and 10-cent buffalo wings after 5 pm. When your arteries really need a clogging, order the beer-battered, deep-fried, bacon-topped cheeseburger known as the "Triple B" (we're guessing that stands for "triple bypass"). Frequently recognized for their bartending prowess, the Sidebar staff are proud to bring the vibe of a neighborhood bar to the buttoned-up concrete canyons of downtown. 16 Bromfield St., Boston, 617-357-1904, WWW.SIDEBARBOSTON.COM

THURSDAY
Revolution Rock Bar & Lounge

YOU SAY YOU want a revolution? Well, you know, there's a new one in the Financial District. Ten months ago, this place opened its doors, and everyone from Sir Paul to the Scissor Sisters would approve of what they've done. Glass candles line the bar, counters and tabletops. Real deer skulls are nailed to walls splattered with black-and-white paint. The light fixtures intertwine with antlers and black leather, while electric guitars hang above the heads of the people relaxing in cushy booths. Then there are the song lyrics stenciled on the ceiling, as well as a mural depicting a motley crew of musical icons: Debbie Harry, Willie Nelson, Marilyn Manson, Steve Miller and others. On Thursdays, the live music ranges from local jambands to big names like Damone, and the throng is diverse, as suits mingle with scenesters and hardcore rockers. A bizarre fusion, it's impossible to say why it works—just like the best music. 200 High St., Boston, 617-261-4200, www.revolutionrockbar.com

DANCE CLUB
Avalon

WHEN A NEW CLUB touts itself as the Latest Big Thing, you can almost hear the floorboards at Avalon groaning amongst themselves. By Boston nightclub standards, Avalon is like the 30-year-old off smoking in the corner—the one who's been there, done that and lived to tell the tale. In fact, Avalon's roots go back 38 years, and their broad and enduring appeal can be explained in part by the fact that those other flash-in-the-pan venues are the size of a cubicle in comparison. Where others advertise themselves as intimate or cozy, Avalon is an unabashed megaclub, holding no fewer than 2,000 people and proving to be just the right fit for the world's hottest DJs (Paul Van Dyk and Tiesto have called the space home) and some of pop music's biggest acts of the hour (Fergie, Amy Winehouse and Joss Stone were all recent guests). Goldilocks and all her bears would be hard-pressed to claim that Avalon feels anything other than just right. 15 Lansdowne St., Boston, 617-262-2424, WWW.AVALONBOSTON.COM

DANCING FOR THE NON-CLUBBER Felt

ANY HOSTESS worth her margarita salt knows that the key to a good party is being many things to many people. And so Felt packs 'em in for more reasons than you can shake a pool cue at—with small velvety nooks perfect for canoodling, live music, movie premiere parties, two floors of billiard tables and the occasional Girls Gone Wild, er, "audition." With four spacious levels and a strenuous commitment to special events programming, you've got to subscribe to Felt's calendar just to keep up with all that's going on. The more spontaneous at heart will be entertained every time they drop in. So the next time you're out with a group of friends and trying to reconcile those who want to dance with those who balk at the idea of another night on Lansdowne Street, skip the rock-paper-scissors routine and head to Felt. It's the place to be for those who won't settle for less than the best of all possible worlds. 533 Washington St., Boston, 617-350-5555, WWW.FELTCLUBBOSTON.COM

DIVE BAR
The Tam

TO WEAR THE dive bar crown, a place must walk that fine line between respectability and a host of random building code violations. It must cultivate an array of unique and unidentified odors and sticky substances, a collection of dusty sports memorabilia, and a devil-may-care attitude from everyone behind the bar. The Tam easily aces all of these criteria. It's the perfect spot to drop in with friends after seeing the latest superhero blockbuster at the movie theater down the block or to do battle with the Emerson students who frequent the Tuesday-night trivia contest. Play Buck Hunter Pro or use the WiFi to chip away at that annoying work project while downing a few PBRs. Although the Tam's scruffy exterior keeps the pretentious folks away, the staff inside are utter sweethearts to anyone who sits down at their bar, and despite the dive designation, the Tam is a class act through and through. 222 Tremont St., Boston

40-SOMETHINGS' BAR
Abe & Louie's

NAMED BY OWNER Charlie Sarkis for his father and his father's best friend, Abe & Louie's understandably attracts an urbane and sophisticated, slightly more mature crowd. The energy is palpable, emanating from the little sliver of a bar that's always three-deep, even at slower times, and becomes all but unpassable when slammed. The elevated prices keep the teenyboppers and club kids strutting their stuff elsewhere, and unlike other Boylston Street hot spots, the ladies at Abe & Louie's tote designer bags they can actually afford. The somewhat unheralded weekend brunch is one of the best-kept secrets in town, where you can pair your Bloody Mary or espresso martini with a lobster club or a smaller portion of one of the kitchen's celebrated steaks. An eminently civilized place for cocktails. 793 Boylston St., Boston, 617-536-6300, WWW.ABEANDLOUIES.COM

Up to 800 partyers pack Avalon's dance floor during the club's weekly gay night.

GAY MEN'S NIGHT OUT
Avalon

WE CAN'T CONFIRM Avalon's claim to have given birth to disco back in the '70s, but we are inclined to believe their other major boast—that of being Boston's "longest-running gay night." Since the early '80s, Avalon's been the only place in the city where you can trawl an immense, high-ceilinged dance floor with 800 of your kindred spirits to the sounds of the world's very best DJs. Other unofficial crowns that Avalon purports to wear include Most Stimulating Production, which involves a series of scantily-clad go-go dancers and a sound system that you feel in your bones (it's been replicated in clubs across the country). Apparently, it's a great night for gay men for all the same reasons it's a great place for the rest of us. 15 Lansdowne St., Boston, 617-262-2424, WWW.AVALONBOSTON.COM

GUYS' NIGHT OUT
Stanza dei Sigari

NEXT TIME you fellas need a night off from the old ball and chain, escape to Stanza dei Sigari, where you'll find an underground haven in the middle of the North End, full of smoke, booze and an atmosphere worthy of The Sopranos. A self-described "classic cigar parlor," this place is loaded with only the most manly indulgences, like their specially selected cognacs, ports and bourbons, not to mention their extensive and exclusive collection of premium cigars. With a museum-like assortment, the knowledgeable staff will assist patrons in choosing the right one. If you're not man enough for a real cigar, puff away on a hookah, or as they call it, a "huqqa," and relax while ogling the especially beautiful female staff (and patrons). With a dark wood bar, dim lights and cushy, intimate booths and nooks, this is a classic destination for a night of bonding with the boys. Expect to get treated like one of the family. 292 Hanover St., Boston, 617-227-0295, WWW.STANZADEISIGARI.COM

HOTEL BAR
Cuffs at Jurys Hotel

COME SUMMERTIME, not even the Jaws of Life can pry Bostonians out of a good patio, even if there are tourists and business travelers jostling them and sloshing their martinis. Vitamin D–deprived locals have been rushing to Cuffs, at Jurys Hotel, which occupies the stately Back Bay building that was once home to Boston Police Headquarters. Try the raspberry mojito or the black cherry cosmopolitan, and enjoy the modern interpretation of Old Country coziness—glowing glass steps lead you down to a fireplace and a fountain, all encased in white-washed masonry. As for hotel guests, there's warmth, liveliness, a great bar menu and a winking glimpse of Boston's Irish history, right downstairs from your pillow. What more could a tourist ask for from a quick jaunt to Beantown? 350 Stuart St., Boston, 617-532-3828, WWW.JURYSDOYLE.COM

LESBIAN NIGHT
Toast Lounge/Dyke Night

DEAR GOD OF NIGHTLIFE: We love singing in the Toast Lounge/Dyke Night choir each year, but could you please give these ladies some competition already? Sincerely, Your Loving Sisters of Sappho. In 1998, Kristen Porter began Dyke Night because few events in Boston catered to lesbians, and because she wanted to raise money for local causes. Nine years and heaps of praise later, Dyke Night—now held every Friday in Somerville at Union Square's Toast Lounge—is still running. It earns bonus points for having that mysterious Fuzzy Fairy drink and for sending 25 percent of the proceeds to nonprofits in the GLBT community. Don't miss the annual game show night, a Lesbian Santa Claus come holiday time, as well as special events for book and film releases. Is Dyke Night destined to reign forever? We hope so. 70 Union Square, Somerville, 617-623-9211, WWW.TOASTLOUNGE.COM

MARTINI
The Oak Bar

BOASTING ONE of Boston's largest and most impressive martini menus, bartenders who know how to mix them, plus elegance and ambiance worthy of the Rat Pack, the Oak Bar has the martini act down pat. Nine standard versions are shaken or stirred and served straight up, with olives or a twist, in carafes set in ice buckets. Prices range from $15 to $17, and despite being old-school all the way, they've embraced the craze for kooky cocktails that call themselves martinis. The Mandarin Sting and the espresso martini are popular choices, as is the Appletini, a shaken mixture of grain vodka, apple pucker, simple syrup and lemon juice. However, the ultimate flavored martini here is the white chocolate martini: crème de cacao and Stoli Orange, shaken and served straight up with chocolate shavings (your choice of white or dark Godiva) sprinkled on top. While we're still celebrating the year of 007, be sure to try the 007 martini: Bombay Sapphire, shaken and served with a twist. James Bond would approve, and so do we. Heartily. The Fairmont Copley Plaza, 138 St. James Ave., Boston, 617-267-5300, WWW.FAIRMONT.COM

HOT SPOT
The Beehive

THE BOSTON CENTER for the Arts is the undisputed hub of South End nightlife, thanks largely to this new, white-hot, "burlesque-bohemian" nightspot. For once, you can believe the hype. Staying true to their connections with the BCA, the Beehive displays local artists' work on the walls and in many of the permanent furnishings, like the custom-made bars and theatrical drapery. Once you make it past the line outside, try the signature Beehive Julep—made with honey, of course—and listen to nightly live music from local headliners and Berklee jazz students. Look for an outdoor patio later this year, as well as the debut of lunch and brunch offerings. 541 TREMONT ST., BOSTON, 617-423-0069, WWW.BEEHIVEBOSTON.COM

MOST IMPROVED
The Alley (specifically Suite and Mansion)

SEEMS LIKE there's more turnover among the clubs in the Alley than there is at the U.S. Justice Department (and at least as much scandalous behavior). But we hope two recent additions—Suite and Mansion—will hold their ground. Where their previous incarnations aimed at a broad (and therefore bland) audience, the new clubs are betting that catering to the needs of a niche audience and offering exclusive entertainment is what it'll take to succeed in the ever-competitive late-night scene. In the case of Suite, a refreshingly European approach means the beats are almost all Euroclub, almost all of the time. Next door at Mansion, a troupe of female dancers wows the crowd twice a night. The days of pandering to the lowest common denominator are over at the Alley; now if only we could say the same for the federal government. 1 Boylston Place, Boston, 617-351-7000, WWW.MANSIONBOSTON.COM

MOST ROMANTIC
Top of the Hub

IT'S HARD TO think of another Boston institution where the staff witnesses up to six or seven marriage proposals on a typical evening. In fact, a plane once flew by the windows trailing a "Will you marry me?" banner. But the Top of the Hub (on the 52nd floor of the Prudential Tower) isn't just the engagement venue of choice. It also deserves to be on your list of regular date places. There's live jazz seven days a week, and a new per-person, per-table food and drink minimum ($24, after 8 pm, in the seating areas) has weeded out the overly boisterous tourists from Yahoo-land. A spring 2007 renovation brightened up the décor, increased the seating and added two wine rooms with a capacity of 4,500 bottles. Even more dramatic is the new bar—which has been spun around 180 degrees from its previous position, allowing anyone seated on a stool a stunning view of the twinkling city below. There's just something about being high above all the hustle and bustle that's conducive to romance, like lovebirds nesting 52 floors above the Back Bay. 800 Boylston St., Boston, 617-536-1775, WWW.TOPOFTHEHUB.NET

PLACE TO BE SEEN
The State Room

WHEN PLANNING a major fundraiser or VIP party in this town, the pressure to impress can be tremendous. But if you're like Pink, Hillary Clinton or Aerosmith, you gracefully knock your guests' socks off with a single act of flair: booking a space at the State Room. Exclusively available for special events, it encompasses several rooms that comprise the 33rd floor of a Financial District skyscraper. The Harbor is practically within spitting distance, and the views are genuinely jaw-dropping. In the Great Room alone, up to 500 seated guests can gaze through two-story wall-to-wall windows that reveal boats heading out to sea or inspect the masonry of the Customs House Tower. The State Room's décor features an ivory palette upon which you and your event planner can realize your vision with flowers and frippery, or keep it simple for a sleek minimalism. Whatever you do, you'd better advise those gorgeous guests of yours to bring a pair of binoculars. The view is that stunning. 60 State St., Boston, 617-854-5000, WWW.STATEROOM.COM

PLACE WHERE ANYTHING CAN HAPPEN
Liquor Store

BAR PATRONS enjoy a good "prop"—that's how one Liquor Store employee diplomatically explains the appeal of the nightclub's infamous mechanical bull, which has a near-magical ability to induce memorable—and occasionally regrettable—incidents among their patrons. With a weekly "Bikini Bull-riding Contest" held on Fridays and a nightly average of 150 bachelorette party participants, it's a foolproof formula for letting your hair down. Onlookers' applause and text messaging determine the winner, who takes home a $200 prize (if he or she doesn't blow it all at the bar, that is). And don't worry, ladies: If you forget your bikini, they'll kindly provide you with one. The bar's also equipped with "dancing poles" (aka "stripper poles"), though gyrating patrons are implored to keep their clothes on. In other words, you'll leave here with the kind of stories you'll one day tell with your hands held firmly over the grandkids' innocent ears. 25 Boylston Place (the Alley), Boston, 617-357-6800, WWW.LIQUORSTOREBOSTON.COM

POST-BANKNORTH
The Greatest Bar

THE CELTICS AND BRUINS may not score with much frequency, but down the block, the Greatest Bar does their best to make sure you can. The décor of this three-year-old after-party commemorates well-known moments in local sports history, which are depicted in a ceiling mural on the first of four floors. Not that you'll notice—you'll be too busy gaping at the full wall of flat-screen TVs behind the bar, which are usually cranking out videos of whatever bootylicious artist is playing the Garden that night. (One especially enormous screen measures 14 square feet, quite possibly exceeded in size in this town only by the screens inside the Garden.) Under all that artificial glow, the first floor is a loud, vibrating, bass-thumping dance affair; the second level is but a balcony for the voyeuristically inclined, and the third and fourth offer slightly more subdued atmospheres—for letting your eardrums recover. So whether you're toasting a win or drowning your sorrows, this is the spot. Bonus points for their NASCAR Sundays. 262 Friend St., Boston, 617-367-0544, WWW.THEGREATESTBAR.COM

POST-FENWAY
Cask 'n Flagon

WHEN IT'S ALL OVER, where do you go to celebrate a wild walk-off win for the Sox? "We're No. 1," says bartender Stephen Cafferky. "Have you noticed our lines are always the longest?" And believe it or not, this place is worth the wait. Open since 1969, it's practically as much a landmark as Fenway itself, but the Cask doesn't dwell on the past; it was refurbished two years ago and now boasts 40 plasma-screen TVs suspended from the ceiling (each numbered like a Sox uniform), along with seven more jumbo screens that fold open from the walls of Oliver's, the back room where Tim Wakefield celebrated his 40th birthday. Sipping one of their dozen or so drafts beside the oversized windows and gazing at the back of the Monster with the game sounds still audible, you can imagine the Cask as an annex to the bleacher seats, with one notable exception: the restrooms, where mini-TVs make it possible to relieve yourself at a urinal while watching the post-game with Caron and Eck. Cafferky's right: They're No. 1. 62 Brookline Ave., Boston, 617-536-4840, WWW.CASKNFLAGON.COM

PRE-BANKNORTH
Halftime Pizza

NESTLED AMONG the Causeway Street eateries that range from the seedy to the overly slick, Halftime Pizza trumps the competition for best place to hang before the buzzer sounds for the first period. The vibe is old-school and familiar: Plastic booths line the walls beside nostalgic photos of Kevin McHale hoisting a championship trophy, Bobby Orr mid-slapshot, and a gutted Boston Garden next to a highway on stilts. On tap, they've got nine draft beers available in three sizes. For food, it's standard pizza-joint fare, but well-executed and a deal at $6–$7 for pastas, salads and subs; at peak times, they sling eight kinds of slices for under $3. (While waiting, you can play the combo Frogger, Galaga and Ms. Pac-Man arcade game that may or may not eat your quarters). One patron described Halftime's pizza as great because "there's not a lot of crust." The same can be said for the place itself. 115 Causeway St., Boston, 617-720-4578, WWW.PLANET99.COM

PRE-FENWAY
Baseball Tavern

THE IDEAL SPOT to apply a coat of primer before hitting the turnstiles on Yawkey Way, the Baseball Tavern is a bit off the beaten path (on Boylston Street), though still in the shadow of Fenway. A four-story funhouse, at the top is an open-air rooftop bar that overlooks the ballpark. There's a green picket fence lining the perimeter, which sports a replica scoreboard reporting a hopeful 12-0 score against the Yankees. The worn wooden floors and patio tables make the Tavern feel homey, and whether you're downstairs listening to a band, propped at one of the other bars or stretched out in the sun on an Adirondack chair, the laid-back waitstaff takes good care of you. And with the money you save eating and drinking outside the stadium, you may be able to upgrade from Grandstand Three to those walltop seats visible a few blocks away. 1306 Boylston St., Boston, 617-437-1644, WWW.BASEBALLTAVERN.COM

Girls' Night Out
Lucky's

IN A CITY already notorious for its lack of proper directional signage, the burgeoning Fort Point Channel area takes the unmarked approach to a whole new level. Lucky's Lounge scrapped their plans for an exterior sign when locals fell in love with the speakeasy feel, before the club could get around to hoisting their name over the door. Now, seven years later, there are plenty of other reasons to love the ever-accommodating Lucky's, including comfort-food favorites like meatloaf and mashed potatoes, specialty drinks like the Lady Luck, and a suite of house bands specializing in the irresistible sounds of classic R&B, funk and soul. But unlike most nightclubs, Lucky's operates under the hospitable (and sadly old-fashioned) notion that women should feel especially welcome during a night on the town. So, although the retro vibe remains equally attractive to both sexes, Lucky's takes extra care of their female patrons with package offerings like Rat Pack–themed bachelorette parties. Women, fear not. You can come here and not spend the night fending off unwanted attention from jerks. And who knows? You might just meet a nice guy. 355 CONGRESS ST., BOSTON, 617-357-5825, WWW.LUCKYSLOUNGE.COM

PRO-ATHLETE PLAYGROUND
Daisy Buchanan's

BEARING AN UNCANNY resemblance to the Cheers set, it seems like Daisy's has been the best place to spot a pro ball player for as long as the curse lasted. It's unassuming enough: a dark pub with low ceilings, checkered tablecloths and Massachusetts Lotto. So how do you tell who's a pro? "Look at the watch," explains bartender Rory Brown. "You see big guys, well dressed, and you know another team's in town. You can always tell by the watch." Frank Thomas ("an extremely nice guy," according to Brown) has been putting his "big hurt" on Daisy's barstools for more than 10 years. Junior Seau pops in regularly. David Wells practically lived there (surprise!). A World Series ring is likely something of a chick magnet; Kevin Youkilis dons his more often than not. Pitchers are seen partying more than position players, though. "They're guys that aren't playing everyday," Brown says. Translation: They can afford to nurse hangovers four out of every five days. "And we get a lot of veteran players with rookies, showing them where to hang out in Boston." It doesn't cost much to booze with the big boys: Cocktail specials include vodka and Red Bull for six bucks. Not bad for poor man's steroids. 240 Newbury St., Boston, 617-247-8516

SINGLES SCENE
Vox Populi

DON'T BE FOOLED by the polished look of professionalism among the 25-to-35-year-olds who frequent Vox in their pursuit of the opposite sex; they bring the same straightforwardness and self assurance to the pursuit that makes them ascendant in banking, law, etc., between 9 and 5. While there isn't a plaque to commemorate it just yet, rumor has it that even Theo Epstein couldn't get out of Vox without meeting his future wife. The much-ballyhooed martini list includes the Elitist and the 50 Carat, but Vox clientele also show up just for the food, and the kitchen recently began serving until midnight. A dessert known as le Gâteau has been flying off the plates of late. (For the uninitiated, it's a fluffy yellow cake with mascarpone and berries—the perfect seduction dish.) Whether you're looking for Mr. Right or Ms. Right Now, the Sex and the City girls would be the first to tell you this is Boston's happy hunting ground. 755 Boylston St., Boston, 617-424-8300, WWW.VOXBOSTON.COM

SPORTS BAR Game On!

ONE OF GAME ON!'s exuberant bartenders explained the bar's appeal succinctly: "We cater to everybody." That's the reason this place takes the coveted crown of best sports bar in a city of thirsty (not to mention bloodthirsty) fans. More than 80 flat screens line the walls of this relative newcomer to the Fenway bar scene. Two floors and intense sound are further pluses, and despite the location, Game On! plays down their proximity to Fenway Park by hyping sporting events of all genres. They host out-of-town alumni groups like Ohio State and Wisconsin, making it a little less lonely rooting for the Buckeyes and Badgers in Beantown. As for the food, it'll come as a pleasant surprise to folks who associate "watching the game" with "gorging on hypercaloric crap." In addition to the obligatory pizza, hot dogs and burgers, Game On! serves up heaping portions of jerked pork kabobs, marinated turkey tips, baked stuffed shrimp, sesame-crusted salmon and the like—and they sweeten the pot with touches like giving away a pair of Monster tickets to one lucky diner each night the Sox play out of town. 82 Lansdowne St., Boston, 617-351-7001, WWW.GAMEONBOSTON.COM

SUMMER SINGLES SCENE
Tia's

"WE'VE HEARD THE term 'meat market' thrown around a bit," says bartender Mike Barbuto of Tia's, the waterfront watering hole that flirts with the North End. And no, Barbuto isn't referring to the sausage cart stationed just beyond Tia's fence. He's talking about the crowd in summertime. Cocktail servers take orders outside for patrons on the lively brick patio, where it seems even the salt air is hormonally charged. "You don't notice it when you're busy, but sometimes you look up and the place is one big flirt-fest," Barbuto says. At capacity, Tia's holds 500 people. Nevertheless, by 11 pm the line at the door will extend to maybe 100 more. Afterwork folk tend to filter out by 8 or 9 pm, replaced by more of a nightclub crowd. What Barbuto calls "intense mingling" lasts all night, though, and with the grassy knolls of Christopher Columbus Park next door, the staff has seen some "interesting things" after hours. And by "interesting things," we mean "sexual intercourse in the corner of the patio nearest the sausage vendor." 200 Atlantic Ave., Boston, 617-227-0828, WWW.TIASWATERFRONT.COM

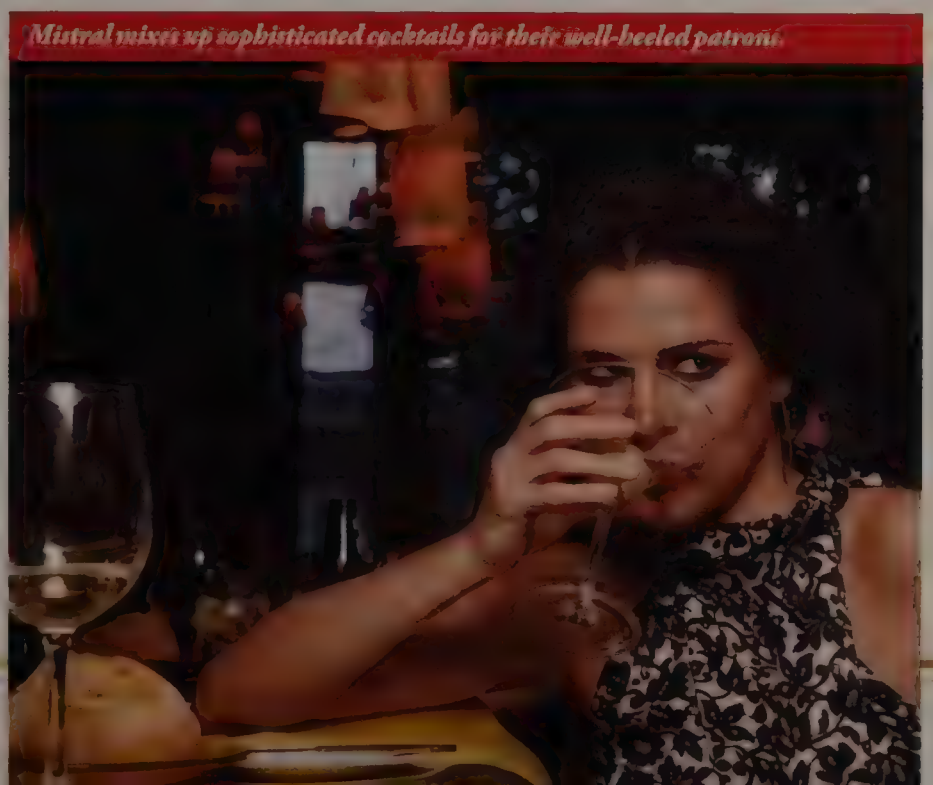
Excelsior



WITH GIANT WINDOWS overlooking the lovely Public Garden and tasteful, geometric décor, Excelsior exudes sophisticated chic. Drawing well-dressed professionals, including a healthy number of regulars from the nearby Four Seasons residences, they swipe many a black American Express card here. Although the music often features upbeat rhythms, "It's never loud. It never gets crazy. The crowd is never too much to handle," says wine director Dan O'Brien. The food, like the drinks, is a cut above the rest: Nibble on yummy appetizers like smoked salmon rangoons and smoked duck quesadillas, or the irresistible "plate of sweets," a triple whammy of homemade marshmallow, candy and cookies. The vibe may be upscale, but it's far from uptight: It's easy to strike up a conversation at the bar with any of the attractive, successful singles who sip cocktails here. You're pretty much guaranteed an interesting conversation; your own juju will determine whether you get a number. 272 Boylston St., Boston, 617-426-7878, WWW.EXCELSIORRESTAURANT.COM

20-SOMETHINGS' BAR
Ned Devine's

HOOKING UP is like real estate: It's all about location, location, location. And youngsters on the prowl tend to congregate at the center of the center of Boston's famed Quincy Market—at Ned Devine's. Of course, size matters, too. The bar is two stories and, believe it or not, Irish-themed, with the Parris Lounge upstairs giving way to a vast space where local cover bands perform every Friday and Saturday night (DJs spin Top 40 on weeknights). "We've seen some interesting dance moves," says manager Mike Thomas, referring to the creative techniques guys and girls use to express romantic interest (also making it the best place to study the mating habits of post-adolescent humans). Although undeniably a pub, Ned Devine's is an upscale one—dudes had best leave the baseball caps and sneakers at home. Thursday through Saturday, the line tends to snake down the stairs and out the door by 10 o'clock, creating a pageant of makeup and anticipation, where everyone's already checking everyone else out. This place must be fun—girls navigate all those cobblestones in heels just to get here. Quincy Market Building, Faneuil Hall Marketplace, Boston, 617-248-8800, WWW.NEDDEVINES.COM

WATERING HOLE FOR THE WELL-HEELED
Mistral

SOME PEOPLE just look like they've got it together. Their clothes fit just so, and their hair is right. They're affable and confident. Others are drawn to them. The nightlife equivalent to those people is Mistral, which has been the default setting for the city's elite since it opened 10 years ago. "We love rich people," says dining room manager Michael Murphy unapologetically. "Rich people are fun." The place is a mecca for CEOs, politicians, professional athletes, models and actors (making it a good place to spot the likes of Tom Brady when he's in town). "It's a who's who of the movers and shakers," Murphy explains. The high demand for tables means it's difficult to get one without a reservation, unless you're someone like Bill Gates. Often, two tables are held for one party, because security guards get hungry, too, y'know. The décor was recently rejiggered in a fresh green, while the ambiance is upscale yet playful. "We're really a neighborhood place," says Murphy. "It's a lot of loud, frolicking people having a great time, stopping by for a pizza on their way home from work… and looking at who's walking in the door." When you got it all goin' on, you don't need to prove anything to anyone, and this is the place for people with nothing to prove. 223 Columbus Ave., Boston, 617-867-9300, WWW.MISTRALBISTRO.COM

BEST-KEPT SECRET
Champagne Room at the InterCon

OPEN TO THE MASSES only when the Intercontinental's RumBa Bar is packed, the Champagne Room usually has its sliding doors pulled shut, leaving visitors to wonder what lies beyond that mysterious entryway behind the bar, adorned with quilted red leather and goddess-figurine door handles. The answer is a plush private lounge with red-velvet sofas surrounded by dark wood and crystal accents, and starting at $2,500, it could be full of 35 to 40 of your closest friends. You'll have your own private bartender, a flat-screen TV, and a spread of food that would make Henry VIII blush. 510 ATLANTIC AVE., BOSTON, 617-747-1000, WWW.INTERCONTINENTALBOSTON.COM

NIGHTS OF THE WEEK

Monday
The Enormous Room

BEAT RESEARCH is exactly what it sounds like, according to DJ Flack, a resident DJ on Monday nights at the Enormous Room in Central Square: "It's experimental party music, all styles mixed together." And by "all styles," he means such esoteric ones as dub-step, Baltimore-breaks, Bhongra and jungle, as well as hip-hop and rock. Flack plays host to guest DJs each week, hooking up their laptops and spinning vinyl on the club's impressive sound system. There's a hole in the bricks of the small DJ booth, so while they're mixing, they can scan the scene and react accordingly, creating a vibe as strange and cool as the musical concept. The space is narrow and cosmic, Middle-Eastern chic. Waitresses fetch cocktails from a service bar and deliver them to glass coffee tables, for clusters of hipsters lounging on leather couches. Couples nestle, shoes off, on elevated, cushy rugs and pillows. Copper star fixtures add to the feeling of being in outer space. Flack is also a video artist and broadcasts random clips on a large screen as a visual backdrop to the music—everything from old Betty Boop cartoons to loops of graffiti-laced subway cars. Just because it's the start of the work week doesn't mean Monday night has to suck. 569 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, 617-491-5550, WWW.ENORMOUS.TV

Tuesday
Rumor

WHAT STARTED as a Tuesday Industry Night is now more of… well, just the best place to go out and dance on a Tuesday night. The dance floor's a heady blend of cultures, ethnicities and styles: You'll see a skate punk grinding it out next to a Rasta hunk. The throng is predominantly early-20-somethings and anyone else energetic enough to work the beat all night long. But hey, the next day is hump-day, so why not kick it to the eclectic sounds of mashed-up Top 40, hip-hop, R&B and international house? For three years, Evolution Tuesdays have been playing host to Boston's most diverse club crowd. NBA players (aka whoever beat the Celtics that night) stop in after the game, and Mark Wahlberg was seen here on a Tuesday. So was Mike Tyson (is he still considered a professional athlete?). Whatever. It's Tuesday, and this is it. 100 Warrenton St., Boston, 617-482-6958, WWW.RUMORBOSTON.COM

BOSTON'S BEST LEATHER BOSTONIAN ★ 2007 WINNERS

Wednesday
District Lounge

THE LOOK of this one-year-old Leather District club can be described as Elle Décor goes to Ibiza and smokes hash while imagining a bar in Buenos Aires transplanted to the Adirondacks. Real birch tree trunks line the walls. Intricate white fixtures hang from the ceiling. Circular leather booths dominate the center of the floor. It's dark, but you can see that everybody who works there is at least borderline gorgeous. They're dressed in black, body-conscious uniforms that highlight all the right parts. (Memo to self: Find out where they work out.) Wednesday is the busiest weeknight; they hit capacity (180) by midnight. And yes, waiting in line sucks, but girls, it's not so bad when the doorman is hot. Guys, note that Patriots cheerleaders are rumored regulars. 174 Lincoln St., Boston, 617-426-0180, WWW.DISTRICTBOSTON.COM

Friday
Underbar

SO IT'S FRIDAY night in the Theater District. Kids are pouring in and out of bars, hooking up, starting fights (thanks, vodka & Red Bull!) and scarfing down pizza. You sidestep puddles of vomit every so often in your quest for a vibrant scene consisting of folks who are a bit more, shall we say, seasoned in the art of club behavior. After the door guys unhook the ropes and you follow the stairs down to Underbar, you realize you've found it. "We cater to a mature crowd," general manager Konstantino Grapsas says. Friday is International House Music Night, where Underbar's sound system—designed by Angel Moraes, owner of Stereo in New York City—gets a workout. (Grapsas calls Moraes "the No. 1 sound guy in the country.") It's loud. The hairs on your arms vibrate to the beat of hip-hop from around the world. Guest DJs mix house with rock as preening models work the runway during semiregular fashion shows. It's dark enough that you'd probably miss Peyton Manning or Chloë Sevigny (both recent patrons), but it doesn't matter anyway. It's the sort of place where people are sophisticated enough to leave celebrities alone—perhaps the single, surest sign of a cool club. 275 Tremont St., Boston, 617-292-0080, WWW.UNDERBARBOSTON.COM

Saturday
Mantra

WITH ITS COMBINATION of vending carts, noise and nutcases, Downtown Crossing is the closest thing Boston has to New York, and since New York is the sine qua non of nightlife, anyone looking for a big Saturday night on the town is likely to enjoy Mantra. Around the corner from the guy who spends his Saturday nights hawking Jesus to the masses, it's a somewhat theatrical scene. You'll want to look good, but you can take your time getting ready because things don't get started until 11 pm, though they're often at capacity (480) by 11:30. (The converted bank vault downstairs holds 60 more.) The vibe is hip without trying too hard. Angular sculptures contrast with the Buddha statue in the center of the floor. Candles and orange curtains create a Café St. Germain feel. Bartenders shake out martinis by the dozen, to the beat of the house, '80s, hip-hop and international music spun by a DJ, as scantily clad dancers shake their things on elevated platforms. The Italian motorcycle maker Ducati held a promotion here on a Saturday night last year. Models and reptiles (snakes and lizards, though not the lounge variety) draped themselves on motorcycles. It had the feel of Weimar Republic Germany without the Nazis. 52 Temple Place, Boston, 617-542-8111, WWW.MANTRARESTAURANT.COM

Sunday
Saint

SUNDAYS AT BOSTON'S most luxuriously louche nightspot cater to the folks in the service industry, as well as athletes, entertainers and, as manager Rob Stein puts it, "people who don't have to get up on Monday morning." Apparently, Boston has plenty of those, since Sundays at Saint are every bit as busy as Friday or Saturday. "Everyone who's out on a Sunday night in the city is here—or they will be by 1 am," says Stein. The switch from International Night to Industry Night occurred when Stein (who's got eight years in the business under his belt) decided that Boston's service community needed an opportunity to take off their aprons and move to the other side of the bar. The club consists of three rooms, three bars and a booming sound system that rocks everything from house, hip-hop and Top 40 to reggae, New Wave and oldies. Players of all stripes are represented: Members of the Red Sox and Patriots are regulars on Industry Night, and although Stein doesn't like naming names, Justin Timberlake was spotted there on a recent Sunday. Do you think he sleeps in on Mondays? 90 Exeter St., Boston, 617-236-1134, WWW.SAINTNITERY.COM

IRISH BAR

The Black Rose

MOST OF THE PLACES vying for this title feel more like Bennigan's franchises than authentic Irish pubs, but not the Black Rose, which has been at 160 State St. since Faneuil Hall Marketplace was still a twinkle in a developer's eye and Irish bars weren't as ubiquitous as they've become. You can brush up on your county flags and the crests of Irish family surnames by the plaques on the wall. Many people on staff speak with bona fide brogues, and the nightly live music features Irish "rebel songs" and ballads as well as familiar American folk tunes, so that even us Yanks or the frequent foreign tourists can belt out the words. Singing and drinking aside, try the weekend lunch of bangers & mash or shepherd's pie (especially when toting those out-of-town visitors who insist on seeing Quincy Market). The Black Rose is also a welcome pit-stop just off the Freedom Trail and the Walk to the Sea, and while it may rock at night, it serves as a family-friendly restaurant by day—just like any pub in Ireland. 160 STATE ST., BOSTON, 617-742-2286, WWW.IRISHCONNECTION.COM

BOSTONIAN ★ 2007 WINNERS BOSTON'S

NEIGHBORHOOD BARS AND CLUBS

ALLSTON
Our House

OH, BOSTONIANS love to hate on the college kids. They drive up our rents. They make parking impossible. They block off entire lanes of traffic in September while they schlep their stained mattresses and plywood furniture, and then they do it again in May. But we will say this for them: They know how to get nice and drunk. And since we can't beat 'em (damn arthritis), the only alternative is to join them—ideally at Our House, an expansive underground establishment that fills to capacity on weekends with study-breaking 20-somethings. If you don't mind a little grunge in you life, it's worth a wait in line for the cheap drinks, lively crowd and an atmosphere that's laid-back (literally: much of the seating consists of sofas and overstuffed chairs) but never soporific (good luck holding a conversation over the blaring indie-rock). Attire is très casual: Tee and jeans, and gentlemen need not remove their hats. But remember, you can only do so much to blend in with the crowd; try not to take it personally if you slip in without getting carded. 1277 Comm. Ave., Allston, 617-782-3228

Clerys

CLERYS IS MANY THINGS to many people—Irish pub, pick-up scene, game stop—but, above all, it remains a beloved neighborhood bar. With 19 beers on tap, a menu of fuss-free fare (nachos, wings, steak tips), and a dark wood and brick décor with tall windows that open up in warm weather, it satisfies the masses. Thursday and weekend nights, DJs spin tunes and energetic young things hit the dance floor to shake off the stress of the work week. Attracting everyone from students to investment bankers to doctors, Clerys fills up fast on weekends, so go early to avoid the lines. 113 Dartmouth St., Boston, 617-262-9874, WWW.IRISHCONNECTION.COM

BEACON HILL
The Hill Tavern

AMIDST THE HERDS of gas stations, sub shops and convenience stores that line Beacon Hill's Cambridge Street, the Hill Tavern emerges as a mecca for local pop-deprived patrons. The relaxed atmosphere provides a welcome contrast to the neighborhood's stuffiness and pretension, and the clientele—ranging from students to MGH's best—do their darndest to keep it mellow. The burgers are massive and tasty, the grilled pizzas are worth the calories and even the chicken, broccoli and ziti plat—not your typical pub fare—pass our test. Aside from an array of taps that would impress the biggest of beer brats, the Hill's the perfect spot for happy hour high-jinks (they have appetizer deals on weekdays), watching sports or even heckling sports personalities—we spotted Dan Shaugnessy there après-Sox last spring. If you can't make it your main destination of the night, stop by on your way home, when you'll find a loyal crowd who flock there for last call. 228 Cambridge St., Boston, 617-742-6192

BRIGHTON
SoHo

WHO KNEW THERE was a little slice of Manhattan in Brighton? SoHo's young and trendy clientele is just as hip as its name would imply, as is the eclectic and stylish interior. In fact, guys should leave the hoody and Red Sox cap at home, or risk incurring the bouncers' ill will. This thriving watering hole draws some of Boston's most attractive and fun-loving young clubbers, many of them recent college grads or current grad students. For those looking to meet a beautiful stranger on the dance floor, Fridays and Saturdays are DJ nights. Massive TV screens flash images in almost every direction. With more than 15 specialty house martinis, there's a drink to suit any taste. In addition to alcohol, the bar provides a full menu that includes everything from pasta to fresh seafood. If you need a momentary break from the rowdy dancing and booming music (or if you simply can't go without checking the score of the game), then make a run for the loo; even the bathrooms are decked out with flat-screen TVs. 386 Market St., Brighton, 617-562-6000, WWW.SOHOBOSTON.COM

BROOKLINE
Washington Square Tavern

ON ANY GIVEN NIGHT, the Washington Square Tavern undergoes a transformation from an intimate, candlelit dining destination to a sleek and buzzing hot spot. Recognized for their outstanding cuisine, this neighborhood joint is open until 2 am, seven days a week, making it more than just an upscale restaurant. Bar patrons never go thirsty, thanks to the extensive beer selection, impressive wine list and variety of flawlessly made cocktails, like the pineapple- or mango-flavored mojitos offered during the summer, made with fresh-squeezed juices. Regulars also rave about the mouth-watering appetizers, such as grilled lamb lollipops with goat cheese brulée and mint oil, which are available until 11 pm on weekends. The perfect balance between luxurious and laid-back, this tavern attracts a crowd that can be described the same way. 714 Washington St., Brookline, 617-232-8989, WWW.WASHINGTONSQUARETAVERN.COM

CAMBRIDGE: Harvard Square
Om

GOING TO OM is like participating in an upscale yoga retreat with alcohol, aromatherapy martinis replacing green tea and sleek designer fashions replacing spandex shorts. Om's Tibetan-inspired yet cosmopolitan environment belies Harvard Square's frumpy reputation for "academic chic" (an oxymoron, if ever there was one). At Om, you'll find a mixed crowd of sophisticated urbanites who come for the atmosphere, excellent cocktails and sexy scenery. Chef Rachel Klein provides mouth-watering meals in the upstairs restaurant and unusual and delectable bar fare in the ground-floor lounge. Drinks like the Purple Rain, a blackberry mojito made with lavender essence, are as delicious as they are gimmicky. The ambiance consistently strikes the harmonious chord between lively and tranquil. Yoga mat optional. 92 Winthrop St., Cambridge, 617-576-2800, WWW.OMRESTAURANT.COM

CAMBRIDGE: INMAN SQUARE
Bukowski Tavern

WITH A BLACK and red exterior beckoning to regulars and passersby alike, Bukowski's is like a small model of Inman Square itself: cheerful and cozy, slightly dog-eared, with an artsy boho, somewhat grungy vibe. In warm weather, patrons enjoy the breeze filtering in through the large front window, while sipping a beer, noshing on surprisingly good food (including plenty of veggie options) and enjoying a range of music. The boisterous atmosphere goes well with a good drink, but regulars know to sit close to their friends if they want to have a conversation over the noise at peak hours. The clientele is unpretentious, relaxed and not out to prove anything—a refreshing change from poseur bars. If you're looking for a no-frills place to blow off some steam, you can't do better. B-Side Lounge

THERE'S SOMETHING ABOUT the B-Side that inspires a fierce loyalty among their clientele. Maybe it's the cozy, convivial atmosphere—so warm and familiar, like the good old days at our favorite smoky hangout, minus the smoke. Or the skillful but decidedly unpretentious bartenders who dip into their vast library of concoctions to whip up the perfect cocktail every time. Maybe it's the down-to-earth but delicious food—bless those late-night menu cheese fries that pull us back from the brink of hangover land. Or even the endless supply of hardboiled eggs at the bar, ours for the peeling and eating, whenever a protein craving strikes. Ah, B-Side. Without the flash and slickness, it's what the word "lounge" should mean. 92 Hampshire St., Cambridge, 617-354-0766, WWW.BSIDELOUNGE.COM

CAMBRIDGE: Porter Square
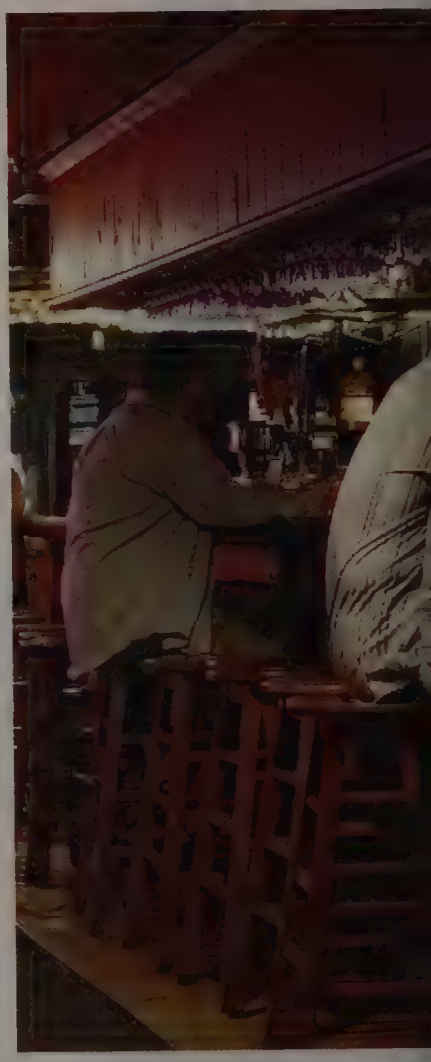
Toad



THIS ENDURING and eternally popular place manages to have a live musical act or two every night of the week, with no cover charge. It almost sounds too good to be true, but it gets better, with their impressive selection of tasty microbrews, friendly and helpful staff, and a cozy yet spacious interior. This place literally has everything you need for any occasion: For romantic dates, secluded corners and nooks inspire intimate conversation over a cocktail; for bad dates, blaring speakers and occasional angry rockers come to the rescue, drowning out any chance of communication. Toad has a unique vibe that's a cross between downtown trendy and Cambridge granola, which results in the perfect blend for anyone looking to hear some great live music while enjoying a cold libation. *1912 Mass. CHARLESTOWN
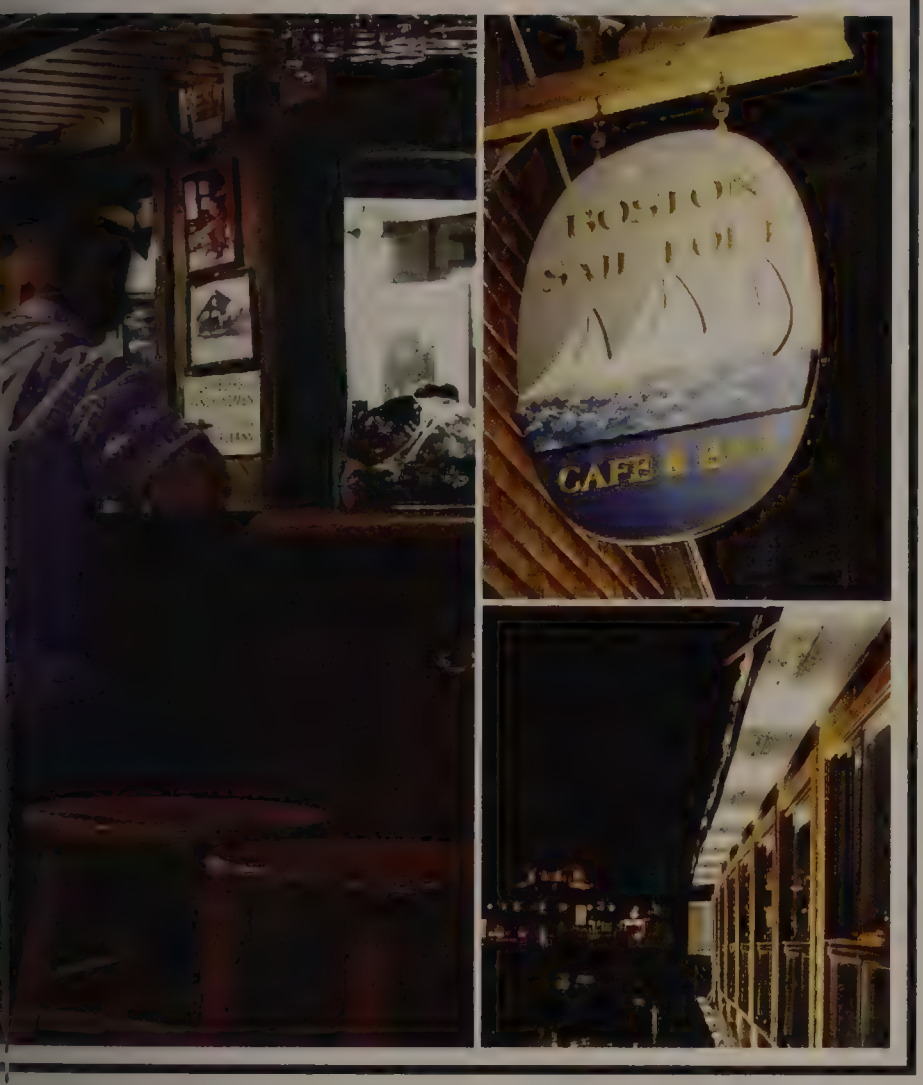
Warren Tavern



VISITING HISTORIC SITES doesn't have to be dry and boring. In fact, it can include drinking! Just have a beer at the Warren Tavern, and you'll be following in the footsteps of former patrons like Paul Revere and George Washington. This traditional pub has such a strong sense of colonial charm that you'll wonder if anything's changed since 1780. With low ceilings, dark wood-framed windows and a stone fireplace, it's easy to imagine that you're in the 18th cen-

NORTH END
Boston Sail Loft

IS THE SAIL LOFT more of an after-work hangout for fishermen, or a late-night hot spot for the pop-collared preppy? We can't say for sure, but we know for certain that whether it's dinnertime or last call, this place is packed. One reason is the fresh and succulent seafood menu—may we recommend the fried scallop plate?—and another is the cheap, yet extensive booze selection. The top draw, however, may just be the view. Perched on the edge of the water and subtly decorated with nautical paintings and lamps, this establishment looks like an upscale lobster shack, where you can knock back a few cold ones and trade stock advice for fishing tips (or vice versa) while watching the sunset from the outdoor deck. The afterwork crowd here is casual and relaxed, while the late-night crowd is a bit rowdier. With dining at the bar (including their unbeatable clam chowder) available into the wee hours, this is a picturesque place to enjoy a drink and a bite any time of day. 80 ATLANTIC AVE., BOSTON, 617-227-7280

tury, except for the TVs, thumping music, and young, skin-baring clientele who would've been pilloried by the Pilgrims. (A note to the fairer sex: The place also seems to draw some of the hottest young bucks in Boston, the kind that look like they grew up playing lacrosse and being named prom king.) Twice a week you can catch live music, and regulars often come for the juicy burgers and relaxed sports scene. So head to the tavern and raise your glass in honor of our founding fathers. 2 Pleasant St., Charlestown, 617-241-8142, WWW.WARRENTAVERN.COM

DORCHESTER
The Blarney Stone

THE BLARNEY STONE'S no Johnny-come-lately in these parts. They're venerable enough to boast serving the first draft Guinness in the United States, but that doesn't mean they're resting on those laurels. Known for their innovative food and drink menu (try the delicious pear martini and scallop and pancetta ravioli), the warehouse-sized space can accommodate multiple large parties without seeming like a madhouse. With contemporary furniture and pop art, and both indoor and outdoor seating, this spot is ideal for either a few casual rounds or a full night of dancing. The bartenders will charm the grump from you after a bad day at work, and after 10 pm Thursday through Saturday, you can burn some calories by shaking it to rhythms provided by top DJs. If dancing isn't your thing, escape to the outdoor patio, where you'll find a landscaped oasis in the heart of Dot—ideal for a cool summer night. 1505 Dorchester Ave., Dorchester, 617-436-8223, WWW.BLARNEYSTONEBOSTON.COM

DOWNTOWN CROSSING
Beantown Pub

THESE DAYS, just because a spot's got the word "pub" in the name doesn't mean it's going to deliver that classic pub feel. The Beantown Pub is one of the throwbacks. The food is hearty, with traditional grub like wings, potato skins and an array of original sandwiches; the beer (and multiple varieties of it, at that) is always flowing, and while the staff is quick and attentive, they also won't take any of your shit. The unpretentious atmosphere inside makes this pub a favorite watering hole for suit-and-tie types looking for fun; the back bar features wall-to-wall pool tables, multiple TVs (as well as a big projection screen), a Golden Tee machine and one of the most extensive juke boxes in the city. FANEUIL HALL
Houston's

RELIABLY FAMILIAR, this Faneuil Hall outpost manages to please both locals and tourists with its American cuisine(salads, burgers, ribs) and classic cocktails (French martinis, cosmos). The sleek, airy interior is equipped with a four-sided bar, plush booths for dining and ample TV screens, and the outdoor patio provides an idyllic spot on warm summer nights for dates or hanging out with friends. The lively drinking scene picks up at the end of the work week. But if getting through a manic Monday or terrible Tuesday calls for an afterwork cocktail or two, heading to Houston's will put you in good company. 60 State St., Boston, 617-573-9777, WWW.HILLSTONE.COM

JAMAICA PLAIN
The Milky Way Lounge and Lanes

THE MILKY WAY is evidence that Jamaica Plain might be in a galaxy of its own (and perhaps a cooler one). The funky bar, lounge and bowling alley all rolled into one is an institution and a welcome change for anyone seeking an alternative to the same ol', same ol'. Almost every day of the week, they offer something unique: free bowling Mondays after 9, live-band karaoke every other Tuesday.... it's impossible to have a dull night here. The eclectic entertainment reflects the clientele; from hip-hop dance parties to indie-rock shows to fundraisers for local gay right groups, you never know who you'll be rubbing elbows (or other body parts) with. After working up an appetite on the lanes, patrons can nosh on delicacies like Coca-Cola–braised pork tacos from the tapas-style bar menu. Drinks range from the standard to the exotic; JP iced tea offers a refreshing take on the traditional summer cocktail. The Milky Way's one reason we're glad we live on planet Earth. 405 Centre St., Jamaica Plain, 617-524-3740, WWW.MILKYWAYJP.COM

NEWTON
Union St.

UNION ST. HAS DONE the impossible: brought thumping music, impressive (and potent) drinks and rowdy Boston party people to sleepy little Newton Center—even after sundown on Friday nights. With DJs or live bands playing every weekend upstairs, patrons always have something to entertain them. Besides the slammin' music, special events keep customers coming back for more, like trivia on Wednesday nights. The substantial menu of American fare will fill your belly, and abundant TVs allow for easy viewing of the game. During warm weather, head to the outdoor patio for some fresh air with your cocktail. You'll never believe you're in Newton. 107 Rear Union St., Newton Centre, 617-964-6684, WWW.UNIONST.COM

SOMERVILLE:
Davis Square
The Burren

LIKE AN IRISH SEA captain who happens to play a string instrument, this traditional pub exudes quirkiness and affability. Decorated with nautical and musical touches (there's a cello over the bar, for example), the Burren embraces their Gaelic roots but welcomes all aboard. There's live Celtic music five nights a week and a weekly open-mike night that allows regulars and newcomers alike to sing whatever songs they want, from any genre—even reggae and country. Clearly the go-to bar for a good time in these parts, the Burren attracts grad students, regulars and families (on weekends for their tasty brunch) with its jawdropping beer list, which includes 19 drafts on tap, music and casual atmosphere. That warm spirit might explain the infectious impromptu dancing that often happens without warning. But the welcoming vibe means no one's judging your moves (we hope). 247 Elm St. Somerville, 617-776-6896, WWW.BURREN.COM

SOMERVILLE: Union Square
The Independent

AT THE INDEPENDENT, there's no shortage of anything: drinks, food, music or beguiling bar-goers. The beer menu features mainstream brews as well as esoteric varieties, like the Cambridge Brewing Company's Great Pumpkin Ale (in the fall). Cocktails also come in standard and offbeat options, like a Manhattan made with Earl Grey–infused bourbon. On Friday and Saturday nobody goes hungry, due to the late-night menu (served until 1 am) that includes yummy stuff like warm artichoke dip, toasted steak and cheese, and chicken-and-bacon fritters. Although they're delicious, we advise avoiding the garlic shrimp if you're planning on doing some dancing and flirting. The lighting is dim, creating a cozy and intimate environment ideal for both the boisterous and the laid-back. Young professionals from all over Boston flock here to enjoy the hip, relaxed scene, excellent drinks and scrumptious food. 75 Union Square, Somerville, 617-440-6022, WWW.THEINDO.COM

SOUTH BOSTON
The Playwright Bar & Restaurant

LET'S BE CLEAR: The Playwright's name is not a salute to Ireland's proud heritage of dramatist/alcoholics. (For that you want Brendan Behan's.) Actually, the staff seem embarrassed when we ask the inevitable question. "It's because we're on Broadway," GM Paul Leahy says, wincing at the wordplay. But this isn't a theme bar for theater buffs; the walls sport nine flat-screen TVs showing the local teams, and the piped-in music leans toward accessible indie-rock, not show tunes. Décor in dark wood and wrought iron establishes an adult mood, but chatty servers and a casual crowd of young professionals keep things light and bouncy, as eager singles, sports fans and sots of all stripes mingle at the bar and on the floor. The food and drink selections won't drop your jaw, but hangouts are about ambience, not amenities. And yes, these recently renovated digs qualify as a neighborhood joint, movie clichés be damned. Times have changed; as our waitress puts it, "Everyone wants to come to Southie." 658 East Broadway, South Boston, 617-269-2537, WWW.THEPLAYWRIGHTBAR.COM

Cambridge: Central Square
People's Republik

YOU DON'T HAVE to be a Communist to enjoy a pop or two at this Central Square favorite. The décor's theme is Soviet-era chic, with vintage propaganda posters festooning the walls. But fear not, because the patrons here are only looking to engage in some good old-fashioned boozing and perhaps a little harmless debate. In between sips of one of the many on-tap brews, play darts or chat with one of the cheerful bartenders. But the real sport of choice is the people watching and eavesdropping; with such a mixed crowd of Cambridge liberals and occasional student preppies, you never know what you'll see or hear. Open until 2 am, unlike most other Cambridge bars, it stays bustling into the wee hours all weekend long. And just

Arts & ENTERTAINMENT

THE INSTITUTE OF CONTEMPORARY ART

DURING ITS construction phase, Boston didn't know what to make of the new Institute of Contemporary Art on the waterfront. It looked like a futuristic airport terminal. It wasn't made of brick. What the hell? And then it finally opened last December, and we loved it. Designed by the New York architecture firm Diller Scofidio & Renfro, the ICA looms large over the Boston shore and the local art scene, providing not only a great venue for visual art but first-rate performance spaces, which host concerts and professional dance lessons on Friday nights in the summer. The museum already has an impressive permanent collection, featuring works from Thomas Hirschhorn and Cornelia Parker. If you don't like what you see inside at any given moment, just look out the window. Art's subjective, but everyone will agree that the view from the ICA is breathtaking. 100 NORTHERN AVE., BOSTON, 617-478-3100, WWW.ICABOSTON.ORG

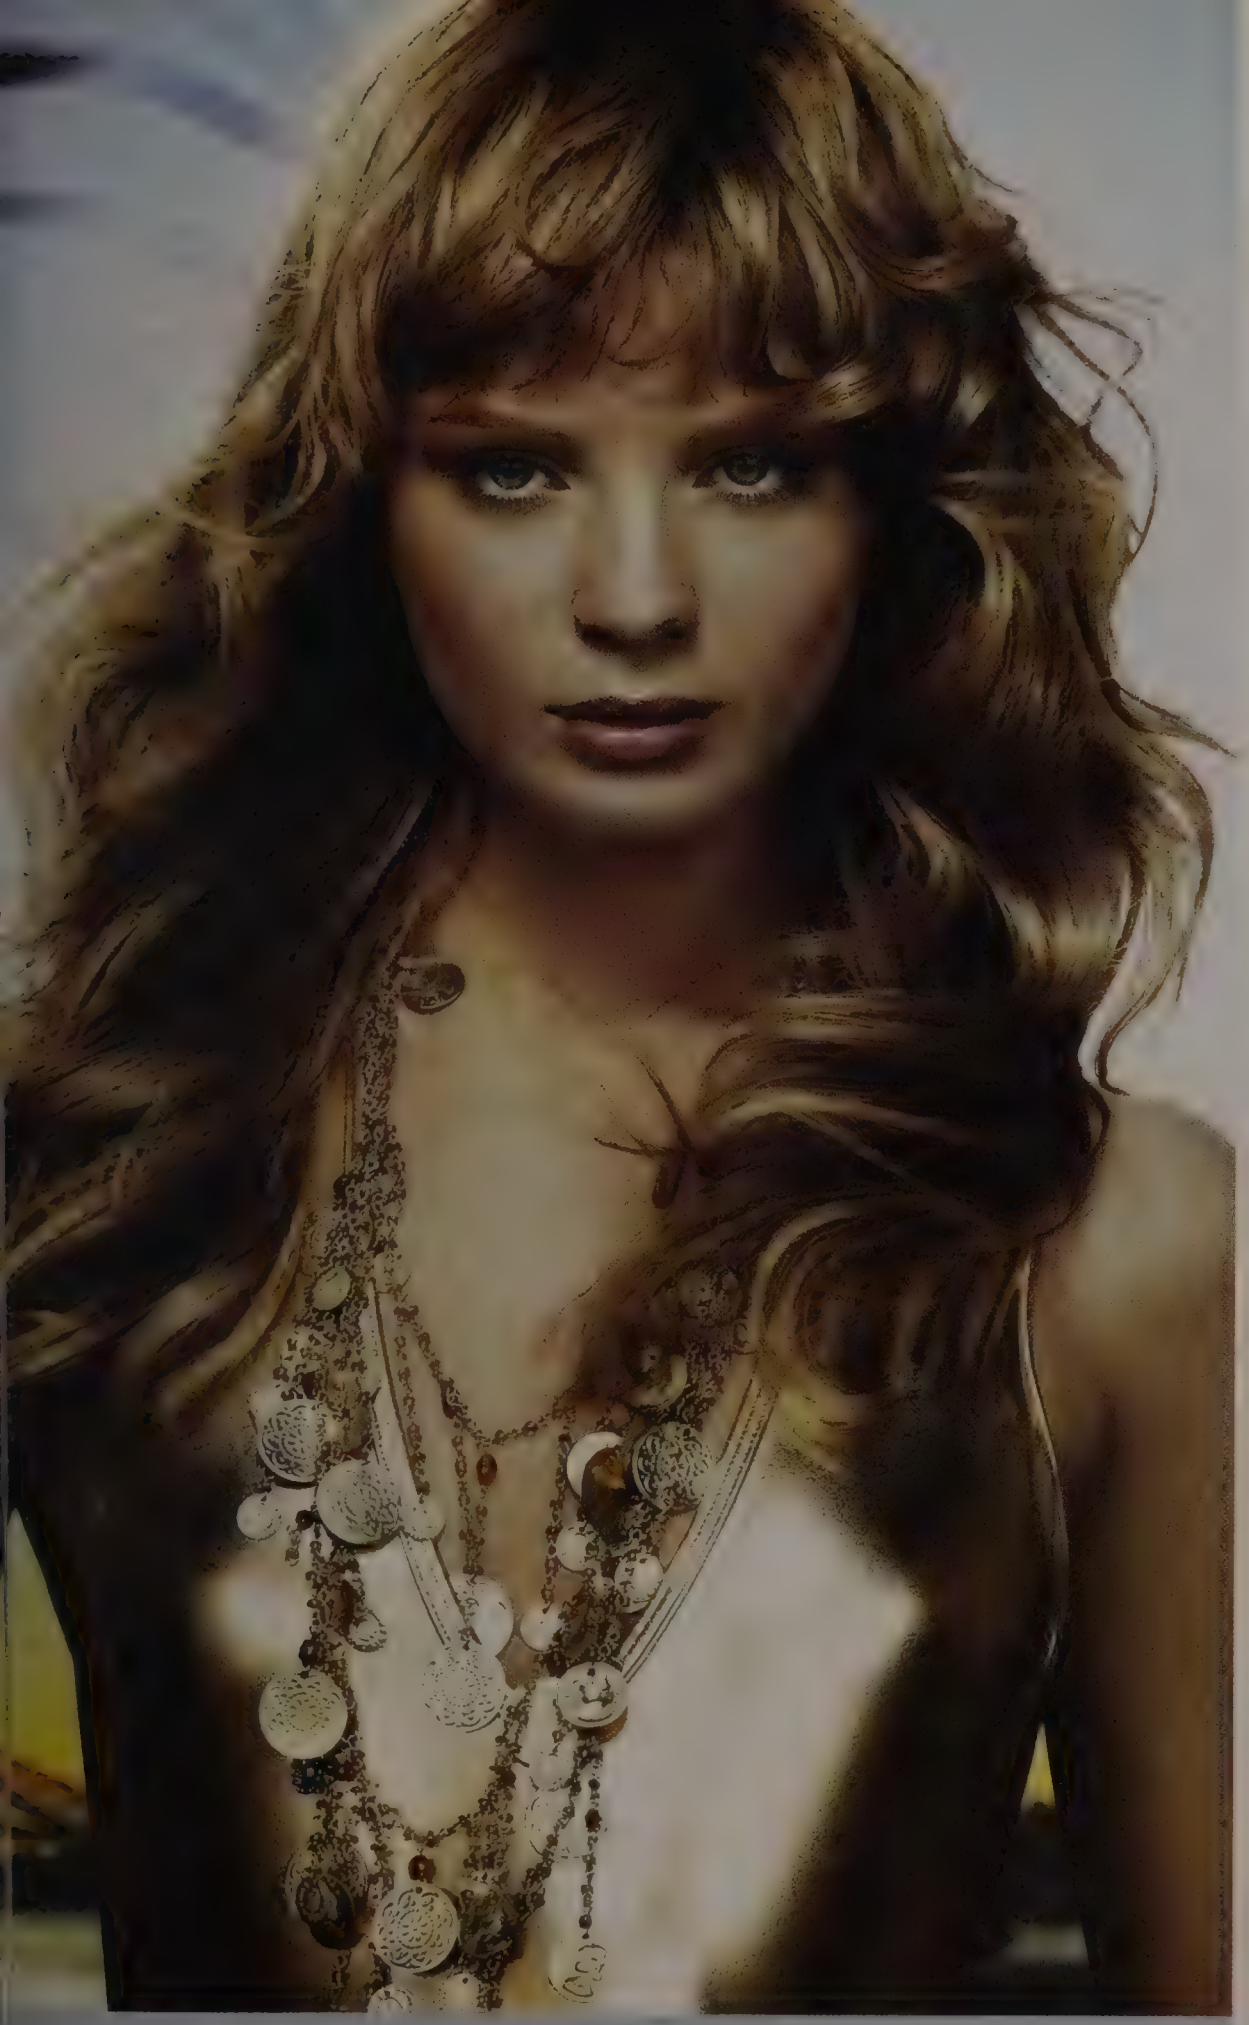
Jimmy Tingle



IT TURNS OUT you don't have to be a humorless Cantabrigian to have a sense of social justice. Jimmy Tingle, Somerville's favorite comedian–cum–artistic director, is also one of the city's most vocal activists; he's proof positive that it's possible to change the world with a smile on your face. Last year, his Off Broadway Theater hosted Jimmy Tingle's All-American Torture Cabaret: A Musical Frolic From Guantanamo to Abu Ghraib to raise money for Amnesty International. This year he motivated a crowd of environmentalists at the rally Step It Up, Somerville and entertained audiences with Jimmy Tingle's American Dream. The founder of the American Peace Party, he explains on his Web site, "We could be the only social justice organization with a 200-seat theater, state-of-the-art sound system, and a beer and wine license." WWW.JIMMYTINGLE.COM

BOSTON'S BEST IMPROPER BOSTONIAN 2007 WINNERS

★★★ ALBUM BY A LOCAL ARTIST ★★★

Session Americana, Beer Town; The Table Top Collective, Volume 3

BOSTON'S FAVORITE ROOTS band recorded their latest album in the same manner they perform their live shows—six guys perched around a table. The result is a skillful exercise in acoustic harmony, with voices and instruments bleeding together in a way that works because the musicians all trust each other—and because they're all really, really good. Volumes 1 and 2 of The Table Top Collective were a double album for kids, but the third volume is strictly for grownups. The prettiest track on the album is "John Brown," Jimmy Ryan's heartbreaker ballad that always closes the band's live shows. We also love the bouncy title track, "Beer Town," which features the classic lyric: "I like the people who bring me beer." Doesn't get much more Bostonian than that. WWW.SESSIONAMERICANA.COM cult faves and—and this is why we love them so much—a slew of shows that are downright naughty, but in a smart way. To wit: Recent features included SmorgasPorn (an annotated montage of the smut that used to play in the sticky theaters of the Combat Zone), the Sex Workers' Art Show (which featured a burlesque dancer named Dirty Martini doing risqué tricks) and Burlesque: By Women, For Women (a ladies-only night showcasing the Boston Babydolls). That's what we call high-low culture. 290 Harvard St., Brookline, 617-734-2500, WWW.COOLIDGE.ORG

COMEDY ACT
Tony V

CAREFUL READERS will notice that local comedian Tony V was on our panel of Boston's Best judges this year. Let it be known that he didn't vote for himself. He won anyway, because he's super-funny and accomplished. You've seen him on the big screen—as the water delivery man in David Mamet's State and Main. You've seen him on the small screen—as Clicky the umbrella salesman on Seinfeld and as the luggage-smashing gorilla on those American Tourister commercials. On the stand-up circuit, Tony has shared stages with Jay Leno, Bobcat Goldthwait, Adam Sandler, Steven Wright, Dennis Miller, the Temptations, Chuck Berry, Billy Ray Cyrus, Kenny Rogers, and KC and the Sunshine Band. His shtick is street-wise, quick-witted and very human: In addition to comic timing, he sports a master's degree in social work. WWW.TONYVCOMIC.COM

COMEDY CLUB
Comedy Studio

IT SOUNDS FUNNY to say that the best local comedy club in Greater Boston sits on the third floor of a mediocre Chinese restaurant called the Hong Kong, but hey, comedy's supposed to be funny. Typical of any intimate Cambridge performance space, the room attracts a smart, quirky audience and delivers in kind. Newbie and veteran stand-up artists push the envelope practically every night of the week, with the kinds of jokes that make you laugh with your brain as much as your belly. The Comedy Studio is where TV studio execs come to scout new talent, but the club also hosts seasoned veterans such as Steven Wright, Jonathan Katz, Eugene Mirman and Tony V. Generally priced between $8 and $10, the shows at the studio are a terrific deal. All that, and they serve scorpion bowls! 1238 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, 617-661-6507, WWW.THECOMEDYSTUDIO.COM

Lawrence-born Termanology has been hailed by The Source as a future star

HIP-HOP ACT
Termanology

THE SON OF a Puerto Rican father and a French mother, Lawrence native Termanology initially gained underground acclaim with a slew of mix tapes, including the Hood Politics series, produced by fellow Lawrencian DJ Statik Selektah. In January 2006, Term finally cut his first album, Out the Gate, which pays crisp poetic homage to his gritty Lawrence upbringing, to his grandma and to his love for the genre. The breakout single "This Is Hip-Hop" gained the attention of famed producer DJ Premier, who produced Term's hottest single to date, "Watch How It Go Down." (The video, filmed in Lawrence and the Bronx, has been played on YouTube more than 100,000 times.) In 2005, Term was lauded as a potential "leader of the new school" by The Source magazine; it featured the rapper in the coveted "Unsigned Hype" column, which highlights artists who don't yet have record deals—an honor that has been bestowed on once-unsigned artists such as Eminem, Notorious BIG and 50 Cent. Term's the real deal, and one to watch.

but he also has a knack for sniffing out the best of the up-and-coming. Recent shows include painter Robert Amesbury's Pronk, a pop-culture homage to 17th-century Dutch masters, and Mary Lum's Some Parts of Various Neighborhoods in the City, a vivid combination of paintings, photographs, drawings and found text. The gallery also hosts the Boston Drawing Project, which aims to raise awareness and stimulate discussion of paper-based art among local artists, curators and collectors. 450 Harrison Ave., Boston, 617-482-2477, WWW.BERNARDTOALEGALLERY.COM

JAZZ CLUB
Regattabar

FOR MORE THAN 20 YEARS, the Charles Hotel's intimate Regattabar has been regaling fans with a terrific, eclectic lineup of local and international jazz and jazz-inspired artists. Coming attractions include the Ron Carter Trio, Charlie Haden and Danny Aiello—yeah, that Danny Aiello. He sings! Who knew? A good mix of smooth music and good lighting makes this place a favorite spot for first dates. The Regattabar hosts some pretty special events, too. Every spring the club welcomes a world-renowned jazz festival; this year attendees were treated to the likes of Bo Diddly, Ivan Lins, Nanci Griffith and the Commitments. The Regattabar is also launching the Kids Summer Music Series—a month of kid-friendly Sunday shows that culminates in a performance by none other than the Dirty Sock Funtime Band! 1 Bennett St., Cambridge, 617-661-5000, WWW.REGATTABARJAZZ.COM

KARAOKE
Courtside Food and Spirits

A LOT OF BARS around here offer karaoke, but most of them relegate it to a weeknight, saving the weekends for live music. Not so at Courtside, where karaoke is king. Sporting a 32,000-song catalog, the popular dive bar opens the mike to amateurs every Thursday, Friday and Saturday night, starting at 9 pm. Regulars recommend getting there early if you plan to sing, because the place fills up quickly with would-be Beyoncés and Stephen Tylers. (After midnight it's often so packed that the bouncer has to turn people away at the door.) Par for the course, some of the performers are downright awful; think Cameron Diaz in that scene from My Best Friend's Wedding, but drunker. Still, everyone receives mad applause, and that's what makes Courtside so fun. Plus, the beer's wicked cheap. 291-299 Cambridge St., Cambridge, 617-547-4374, WWW.COURTSIDEKARAOKE.COM

LOCAL ACTOR
Will Lyman

MAYBE YOU WOULDN'T recognize Will Lyman on the street, but if he spoke to you, then you'd know him immediately. Lyman's is the smooth, authoritative voice that has narrated the locally produced PBS series Frontline since 1984. Last year, he received rave reviews for his behind-the-scenes role as the narrator in Todd Field's dark feature film Little Children (which was based on the novel by local author Tom Perrotta). But Lyman, who attended Boston University, makes waves when he's embodied, too. Since 1998 he has performed with the Commonwealth Shakespeare Company as Brutus in Julius Caesar, Prospero in The Tempest and Claudius in Hamlet. Most recently he wowed audiences in the title role of Leslie Epstein's controversial King of the Jews, produced by the Boston Playwright's Theatre—that role earned him a prestigious Elliot Norton Award nomination. He also makes films through his company Whitethroat Productions, fittingly named for a sweet-sounding bird.

FRINGE THEATRE

Gold Dust Orphans

A CITY LIKE OURS—what with its seven-month winters and its aristocracy—can suffer from a severe lack of whimsy. Enter the Orphans. Founded in 1995 by a small group of writers and performers, the company produces plays that are very, very loosely based on popular standards of the stage and the silver screen. Past shows have included Joan of Arkansas, Scarrie, Joan Crawford's Christmas on the Pole, Rosemary's Baby—The Musical!, The Exorcissy, Death of a Saleslady, Silent Night of the Lambs, The Plexiglass Menagerie and The Milkman Always Comes Twice. Needless to say, most of the performances feature men in drag. Unlike most orphans, these ones have two homes: the Machine nightclub in Boston and the Crown and Anchor in Provincetown. 617-265-6222, WWW.GOLDDUSTORPHANS.COM

PLACE TO CATCH A COMEDY HEADLINER

Comedy Connection

WHAT HAS TWO LEGS and enough talent to make even the snobbiest Bostonian happy to venture into Faneuil Hall? Pretty much anyone who performs at the Comedy Connection. The Connection has been bringing laughs to Beantown since 1978, making it one of the longest-running comedy clubs in the country. What used to be a breeding ground for new stars is now a stage for some of the biggest—and funniest—acts in the world. In the past year the club has hosted a mix of successful side-splitters such as Robin Williams, Greg Behrendt, Damon Wayans and Greg Proops. But it still gives props to the up-and-coming, too, with a regular Monday-night amateur showcase. The club is a guaranteed good time, and everyone who performs there is talented enough to make audiences laugh off the two-item minimum. 245 Quincy Market Building, Faneuil Hall Marketplace, Boston, 617-248-9700, WWW.COMEDYCONNECTIONBOSTON.COM

QUIRKY EVENING

The Bad Art Ensemble

EVERY WEDNESDAY NIGHT, happy-go-lucky fans pack the Plough and Stars pub in Cambridge to enjoy the silly antics of the Bad Art Ensemble. Since 1989, the horn-heavy jamband has delighted crowds with funny songs (like the ditty about an old cowboy stripper with a tattoo of Sam Houston on his tushy), games (tossing free Bad Art schwag into the audience), and top-notch talent; most of the musicians are members of better-known Boston bands (Morphine's Dana Colley regularly sits in). Leader Max Azanow describes the atmosphere as that of a clubhouse: "We pick on the people who come to our shows, and what's happening in their lives becomes part of the act. It's a big inside joke that, week by week, more people become a part of." 912 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, 617-576-0032, WWW.PLOUGHANDSTARS.COM

REASON CABARET IS HIP AGAIN
The Dresden Dolls

FOR THE PAST couple of years, cabaret artists in Boston have seen a renewed interest in their craft, but haven't known exactly what inspired it. Was it the popularity of American Idol? Was it a collective yearning for intimacy? Well, maybe the sudden interest in the genre has something to do with the fact that the hottest cabaret act on Earth hails from Beantown. The achingly hip Dresden Dolls, Amanda Palmer and Brian Viglione, have taken the world by storm with their weirdly fantastic brand of "Brechtian Punk Cabaret." At the beginning of the year, the duo took a break from the rock-star circuit for a month-long run at the ART's Zero Arrow Theatre; that show, dubbed The Onion Cellar, was wonderful and strange. This summer the Dolls are busy traveling the nation with Cyndi Lauper's True Colors tour, but we hope they come back soon. WWW.DRESDENDOLLS.COM

The Dresden Dolls showed their range at the ART's Zero Arrow Theatre between tours.

RECORD LABEL
Hi-n-Dry Records

MUSICIANS DON'T stick around Boston because they want to be superstars; they stay because they love the music scene here. Hi-n-Dry Records isn't out to create superstars. They aren't even the biggest label in Cambridge. But they're something special, in spite of their humility. Founded by the late Morphine singer and bassist Mark Sandman, Hi-n-Dry has evolved into a cooperative effort comprising some of this town's best musicians, including the Twinemen, Dennis Brennan and Asa Brebner. They're actually a record label with heart and soul. 288 Norfolk St., Cambridge, 617-868-7580, WWW.HI-N-DRY.COM

Bang Camaro

THEY'RE A FIVE-PIECE heavy metal band with 20 lead vocalists, who all sing at the same time, usually in unison. If they weren't good they might sound like a college a capella group getting drunk at a frat party in 1985. But Bang Camaro are really good. They're awesome, actually, and they've sold out every local gig they've ever played—including shows at the Mercury Lounge, the Paradise and the Middle East. It's not surprising. With sweet guitar riffs and the kind of catchphrase lyrics you can memorize by listening to their eponymous CD on the way to the show, it's a freaking blast to see them live. And sing along. And bang your head. Bang Camaro's single "Push, Push (Lady Lightning)" is used in the video game Guitar Hero II, which is as genuine a sign of success as any these days. WWW.BANGCAMARO.COM

ROCK CLUB
The Middle East Restaurant and Nightclub

WHAT STARTED OUT in the 1970s as a Lebanese eatery has evolved into the most eclectic rock venue in town. With four performance rooms under one roof and shows every night of the week, there's something for everyone who likes indie music. Upstairs at the Middle East features bands like the Bleedin Bleedins and the Self Righteous Brothers. Head Downstairs to hear bigger-name acts, like Silver Jews or the English Beat. The restaurant Zuzu features some of the quirkiest DJ nights in town, while the Corner restaurant hosts a belly-dancing show two nights a week. And if you're not a people person… well, you can bring your laptop to the club; they have free Wi-Fi, too. 472 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, 617-864-EAST, WWW.MIDEASTCLUB.COM

IN MUSIC THEORY, the term "sustain" refers to the amount of time a note lasts after it's played and before it becomes inaudible. Pipe organs, for example, have lengthy sustain. So do electric guitars after a hard strum. Acoustic mandolins, on the other hand, have virtually no sustain. Mandolin notes disappear almost immediately. And in order to make up for that, mandolin players must play very quickly. There's no half-hearted hard strumming in mandolin. There's just very constant, very fast finger motion. Sean Staples—a prominent member of local groups Session Americana and the Resophonics—is one of the most talented string players in town. He's been honing his mandolin skills in the roots scene

THEATER COMPANY
The Huntington Theatre Company

IT'S NO CONTEST, really. The Huntington has been arguably Boston's best professional theater company since its founding a quarter-century ago. In that time, it has received three Tony Award nominations for productions that ended up on Broadway and six Elliot Norton Awards for Outstanding Production. Innovative takes on classics—from Shakespeare to Sondheim—have garnered critical acclaim. The Huntington also has produced nearly 50 premieres, including plays by Tom Stoppard and Horton Foote. A highlight of the company's 25th-anniversary season was a new production of Noel Coward's Present Laughter starring Victor Garber (agent Jack Bristow on Alias). Performances happen at the elegant Boston University Theatre and the swanky new Stanford Calderwood Pavilion at the Boston Center for the Arts. 264 Huntington Ave., Boston, 617-266-0800, WWW.HUNTINGTONTHEATRE.ORG

TRIBUTE
In My Life: A Concert for Brad Delp

WHEN BRAD DELP DIED March 9, we lost a hero, a legend and a hell of a nice guy. The lead singer of classic rock band Boston—and, more recently, of cover act Beatlejuice—Delp meant something to anyone who heard him play. We knew we wanted to pay tribute but weren't sure how. And then Muzz (drummer John Muzzy) did it for us, gathering Beatlejuice's remaining members and a terrific lineup of old friends to perform in Delp's honor. The result: three emotional sold-out concerts at Arlington's Regent Theatre in the first week of May. More than 20 vocalists sang their broken hearts out. They were all good, but none was as good as Brad, and that was kind of the point. "The thing with Delp was that he had so many circles," says Muzz, who was friends with Delp for more than 20 years and played with him for 14. "I wanted to focus on showing the void that Brad has left, so we focused on the vocals."

LOCAL AUTHOR

NOBODY CAPTURES the angst of the American suburbs better than Belmont resident Tom Perrotta, whose prose manages to be merciless, gentle and hilarious at the same time. The New York Times recently called him "an American Chekhov," and movie directors can't get enough of his works, which translate beautifully onto the big screen. In 1996, his satirical novel Election was optioned for a film (starring Matthew Broderick and Reese Witherspoon) before it was even published. The movie Little Children, adapted from his novel and for which he cowrote the screenplay, was nominated for both an Oscar and a Golden Globe last year. His next novel, The Abstinence Teacher, comes out in October, and the movie version is already in the works. "It's about sex education, religion and the culture war, as experienced by one suburban town," Perrotta says. WWW.TOMPERROTTA.NET

Archaic Fenway Park Feature

ON-DECK CIRCLES

IT'S NOT the bathrooms or the three inches of knee room in most of the seats. Nope, it's the on-deck circles, which are located so close to the batter's box that a foul ball would practically decapitate whoever's on deck. Fortunately, upcoming batters steer well clear of Fenway's Circles of Death, and over the course of a game their immaculately raked dirt remains the only unsullied terrain on the field.

BILL MUELLER Pleasant Surprise Award

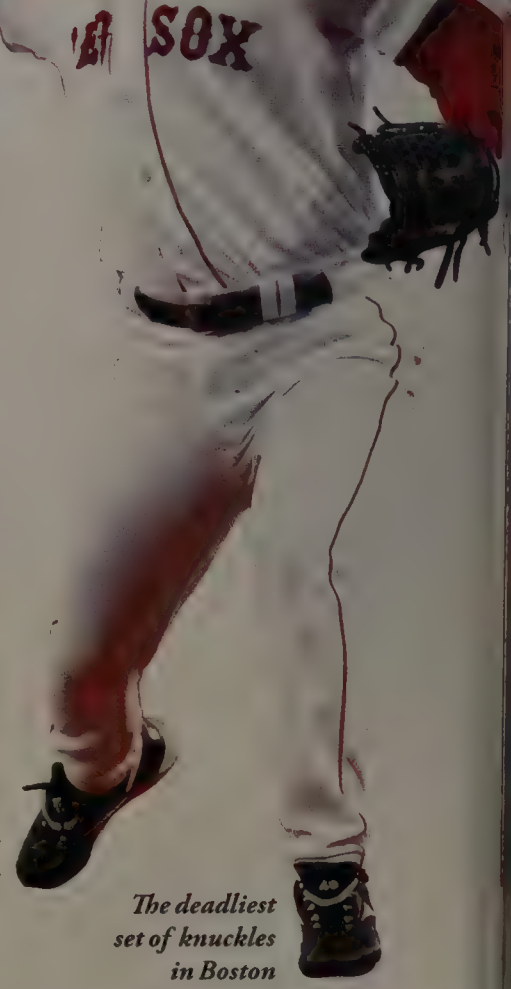
Hideki Okajima

ALSO KNOWN as "the other Japanese guy," Okajima's emerged as the go-to middle reliever on the staff. Through early July, with 38 appearances, Okajima's 0.88 ERA was better than even Jonathan Papelbon's, giving the Sox the unexpected luxury of an elite middle-relief bridge to span the gap between starter and closer. All he needs now is his own catchy nickname, so allow us to suggest Hi-O. Hi-O silver, away!

CLUTCH PERFORMANCE

Troy Brown

HERE'S THE SITUATION: Your New England Patriots have their backs against the wall in the AFC Divisional playoff. The Chargers look like they're on an unstoppable march to the Super Bowl. Near the end of the game, Tom Brady throws a fourth-down pick, and it seems the game is over; all Chargers safety Marlon McCree has to do is fall down with the ball. But he tries to run, and Brown, who has a bit of experience playing defense, strips the ball. The Pats recover, drive for a touchdown and two-point conversion to tie the game, and later win on a field goal to advance to the AFC Championship. If the Pats had managed to win the Super Bowl, this is the play that we would've defined as the crucial turning point—when Troy Brown rescued the 2006 season.



When the going gets tough, Troy gets going.

CRAFTY VETERAN

Tim Wakefield

WAKEFIELD'S THE FOURTH starter in a stacked pitching rotation, yet through mid-May the humble knuckleballer had the best ERA. No, not the best ERA on the Red Sox—through his first seven starts, Wakefield's 1.79 ERA was best in the major leagues. Not bad for a 40-year-old who throws about as hard as Johnny Damon's mom. Of course, since May Wake's come back down to earth, but that's the nature of the knuckleball beast. With the members of the 2004 championship team largely scattered about the majors, it's nice to know we've got a guy in the back of the rotation who'll help lead the way come fall.

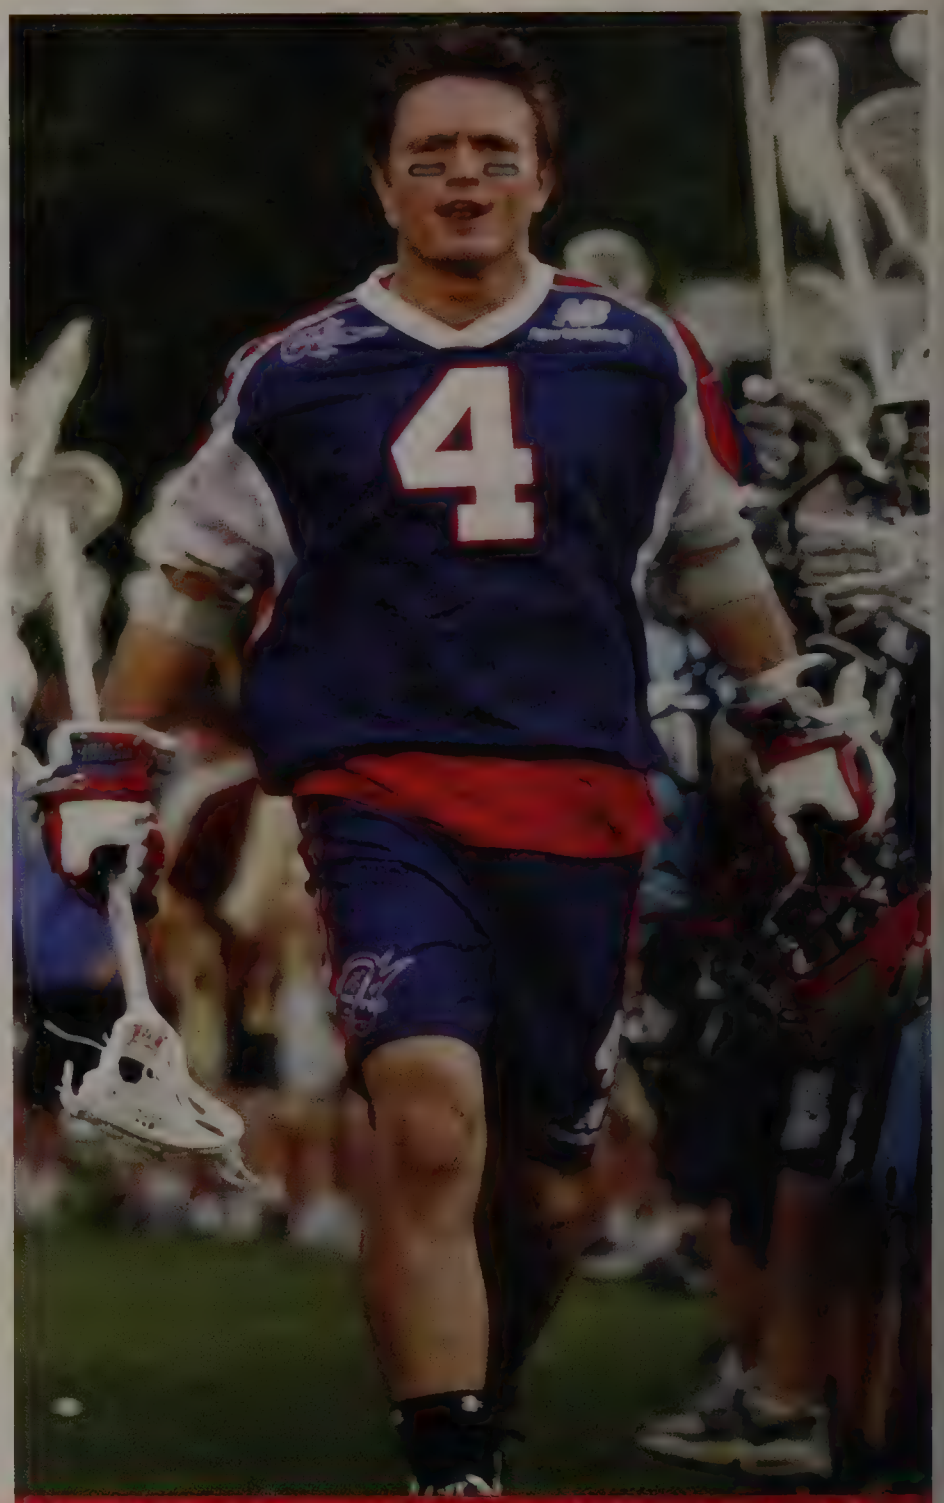
CRAZY DUDE/ LAWN BOWLER
Julian Tavarez

EARLIER THIS YEAR, a New Yorker piece on Manny Ramirez mentioned that Manny and Tavarez played together in the minors and were, let's just say, kindred spirits. For example, they both asked a local beat reporter if they could borrow $60,000 so they could buy Harleys. Tavarez, like Manny, is keeping it real (strange) now that they're major league teammates, as first baseman Kevin Youkilis found out firsthand in a May game against the Rangers. Frank Catalanotto hit a one-hopper back to Tavarez, who, instead of throwing the ball to first base, rolled it along the ground underhanded. Explained Tavarez afterward, "Some things like that, I just do it."

FEMALE ATHLETES
The Breakers

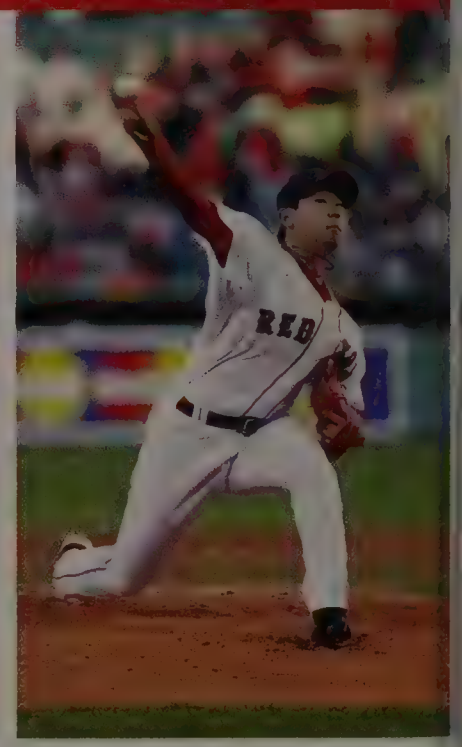
GUESS WHO'S BACK, back again? The Boston Breakers pro soccer team folded, along with the rest of the WUSA league in 2003, after three seasons. But after a five-year break—haha!—the team will return in April of next year. The roster has yet to be formed, but we're already looking forward to Breakers 2.0. We're also hoping for the owners' sakes that this time around the team can remain solvent, because you don't toy with the emotions of a bunch of women in cleats.

IRONIC MASCOT
Lucky the Leprechaun



SERIOUSLY, THE NO. 5 pick? After everything else that's happened to the Celtics in the past 20 years, they tank the 2006-2007 season and still lose the Oden/Durant sweepstakes? Perhaps the Celtics should try a little mascot reverse psychology, because obviously someone stole Lucky's charms right around the time Len Bias OD'd. Therefore, ladies and gentlemen, please welcome the new Celtics mascot, Cursey, the Black Cat Who Walks Under Ladders and Steps on Cracks! Failing that unlikely gambit, they could always just renew Doc Rivers' contract. What? Oh.

MVP
Jonathan Papelbon



THERE ARE A LOT of different ways you can argue the case for an MVP, but we like to ask, "Who's the guy that's totally irreplaceable and central to a team's chances of winning?" In that respect, it's hard to find a player who's more important than a closer, and it's hard to find a better closer than Papelbon. Look at the Yankees dynasty of the late '90s; the central character, the guy who epitomized the pinstriped dominance, is Mariano Rivera. With Papelbon, we have our own Sandman, and if you want to point a finger at one single reason for the Red Sox' success this season, Papelbon and his lethal stare are it.

NEW ADDITION
Daisuke Matsuzaka

OK, SO WE WERE pretty pumped when the Sox signed Dice-K. After all, it wasn't our $100 million or so on the line. But deep down, we wondered if he could possibly live up to the hype. Incredibly, he has. We never knew stoicism could be so badass until Matsuzaka took the mound for his debut and promptly fanned 10 Kansas City Royals en route to his first major league win. He's had a few bad days since, and he wears a hula hoop around his neck, but he's shown enough brilliance to encourage fans that he's not going to fall victim to the dreaded "Hyped Japanese prospect who can't adjust to the majors" syndrome (see "Igawa, Kei"). He's pitched a complete game. He's on track for 200 strikeouts. When he's in the groove, Dice-K reminds us of a Japanese Pedro. Now, where's that gyroball?

Top: Will it be Dr. Jekyl or Mr. Drew?; bottom: Laurence Maroney, our ROY named indoor team that'll begin playing next year at the Garden in the National Lacrosse League. Whether this means that we're about a year away from a Will Ferrell lacrosse movie is anyone's guess, but one thing's for sure: If you're a lacrosstitute, Boston's the place to be.

ROOKIE
Laurence Maroney

WHEN THE PATRIOTS drafted Maroney, the consensus was that Belichick had pulled off another steal, and in his rookie year Maroney didn't disappoint. Splitting carries in a platoon with veteran Corey Dillon, Maroney rushed for 745 yards and six touchdowns. He wasn't perfect—his juking back and forth in the backfield instead of hitting the hole was a college habit that should've been left in his Minnesota Golden Gophers locker—but those plays where he turned the corner, shifted gears and absolutely torched the backs demonstrated his potential to emerge as an elite running back. With Dillon out of the picture and a newly installed, top-notch receiving corps daring defenses to cheat the run, the 22-year-old Maroney finds himself the No. 1 back on one of the top teams in football.

SECRET WEAPON
Asante Samuel

WE'RE NOT TALKING about 2007—where we'll be happy to see Samuel suit up for even the last six games. This is about last season, and what made him a secret weapon back in '06? Well, how about the fact that opposing quarterbacks kept throwing the ball in his direction, even as he began piling up the interceptions? By the end of the regular season, Samuel had picked 10 balls (including three in one game against Chicago), tying with Champ Bailey for the league lead. He was even more ridiculous in the postseason, intercepting passes from both Chad Pennington and Peyton Manning and then, for good measure, returning both those picks for touchdowns. With stats like that, it's a safe bet that if he ever takes the field in 2007, he'll be a secret no more.

SIGN THAT HELL
Is Getting Chilly
The Celtics Dancers

THE CELTICS, one of the most venerable franchises in sports, broke a longstanding tradition last year and added a female dance troupe to entertain the crowd during losses—we mean, games. Are they any good? Well, the C's were third in the NBA in ticket sales while being near the bottom in terms of hoops performance, so you do the math.

TIME-WILL-TELL DEAL
JD Drew

WHEN THE SOX signed Drew last winter, a collective moan issued from Red Sox Nation. It was a crapshoot whether we'd get the JD Drew who batted .323 and hit 27 homers in 2001, or the oft-injured Drew who played in only 72 games for the 2005 Dodgers. Right now, the verdict's still out. Drew's had his hammy problems this year, but then he also exploded for a two-homer, seven-RBI game in June. (Whatever the case, props to Theo and Co. for extracting an escape clause from Scott Boras—the Sox have the right to void the last two years of Drew's five-year deal if his troublesome shoulder keeps him on the DL for a certain amount of time.) We're still of two minds on Drew. On the one hand, we'd love to see him succeed, both for his own sake and the Sox', but on the other hand, if he's plagued by nagging injuries then we'll get to call him Nancy Drew.

TRADE
A 2008 Fourth-round Draft Pick for Randy Moss

THE DIFFERENCE between the 2006 Patriots receiving corps and the 2007 lineup is reminiscent of an episode of Pimp My Ride—a rusted-out hulk on four different rims rolls into the garage, and out comes a show car with 22s and TVs in the headrests. Hell, we were happy when the Pats signed Wes Welker. We were ecstatic when they added Donté Stallworth. But when they snagged Randy Moss from the Raiders for a 2008 fourth-round draft pick, well, that seemed almost unfair, to the point that Brett Favre had a national meltdown over the fact that the Packers didn't get to Moss first. Unless Moss burns down Gillette Stadium and moons the ashes, this is the deal of the year, and maybe the decade.
